What amounts to-Loss of freedom-Sufficiency of -Actual detention and complete loss of freedom-Necestity.

In the leading case of Bird v. Jones, Coleridge, J. said: "Some confusion seems to me to arise from confounding imprisonment of the body with mere loss of freedom; it is one part of the definition of freedom to be able to go whichersoever one pleases; but imprisonment is something more than the mere loss of this power; it includes the notion of restraint within some limits defined by a will or power exterior to our own." Williams, J. speaks of imprisonment a being "entire restraint," and Pattison, J. adds, "imprisonment is, as I apprehend, a total restraint of the liberty of the person for however short a time, and not a partial obstruction of his will, whatever inconvenience it may bring on him (158). -Bail-Person on-If still under imprisonment.

The question is: Is a prisoner who has been released on ball under imprisonment still so long as he is out on bail?

It was said that the imprisonment continued until the warrant to arrest the appellant was set aside. So long as the restrain of ball lasted—and it may be taken that it lasted until the warrant was set aside—the appellant, it was argued, was not a free man; he was even liable to be actually imprisoned through the action of his surety, or possibly by reason of the intervention of the Government.

All this may be very true. But no authority was cited in support of the contention. The whole weight of authority is the other way. Nothing short of actual detention and complete loss of freedom will support an action for false imprisonment (158). The appellant's imprisonment did not last one minute after he was liberated on bail. The very object of granting bail was to relieve him from imprisonment (158). (Lord Macnoghten.) -Effect on its liability for maintenance.

The plaintiffs-respondents brought the suit out of which the appeal arose to recover from the appellants, the owners of the village of D, the amount of the arrears of certain hereditary rights of office, alleged to be due to the plaintiffs from the appellants.

The plaintiffs' suit was founded on the allegation that they were the hereditary Mujoomdars. Paick, and Mehta of a pergunna, and that the owners of the village of D which was situate within the pergunna were bound to pay the hereditary Mujoonidars and their officers the annual sum of Rs: 56; that the village of D had in the year 1803 been granted by the Governor-in-Council to the father of the appellants; and that neither the appellants' father nor the appellants who succeeded to the village as his heirs had paid any part of the hereditary or customary dues.

The appellants pleaded in defence a claim of redemption from the payment of all customary dues, by virtue of the grant of the village by the Government to their father in

Held that the grant of the village, in inam by the Government, could not deprive the Mujoomdars of their hereditary rights (33). (Mr. Justice Erskine.) BEEMA SHUNKER P. JAMAS-JEE SHAPOR-JEE.

-Evidence as to-Cumulative effect of to be consider:d-Piccemcal consideration, improper.

The District Munsif held that an inam grant of an agraharam was a grant of the melvaram only, relying on 4 main points. The High Court reversed him and held that the document was equally consistent with a grant of both the varams. The learned Judges did so, dealing with each of the points relied upon by the Munsif separately, and finding the points inconclusive as to each of them.

Held, that the High Court's mode of treating the evidence was faulty, inasmuch as it ignored the weight which was obtained from the effect of the whole. (Lord Atkin.) SEETHAYYA 2. SUBRAMANYA SOMAYAJULU.

-Kudivaram-Grant also of-Evidence showing.

In a case in which the question was whether a grant under which the plaintiff held the suit a graharam village was a grant of its revenue only, or whether it was a grant of the preprietary right in the village, that is, of the soil of the village, the original grant itself, which was of 1373, was not forthcoming. But that grant had been recognized and confirmed by the British Government, Mr. Oakes' inam register prepared in pursuance of S. 15 of Regulation 31 of 1802 showed that the whole of the suit agrabaram village had been granted by Sri Madana Veraa Reddi to N, and had been enjoyed by his successors in title for 429 years. It was not proved, nor was there any evidence to suggest, that at the date of the grant there were any tenants in the village holding lands with any rights of occupancy by cus tom or otherwise.

Held, reversing the courts below, that the grant under which the plaintiff held was not a grant of the revenne only of the village, that it was therefore not an "estate" within INAM-(Contd.)

-In a suit for ejectment brought by an inamedar of a village in respect of part thereof, it appeared that, in 1783, in confirmation of a grant of 1748, which was not in exidence, the village, together with gardens, boly shrines, wells, and tanks was granted as a surva agraharam by the zemindar in favour of appellant's ancester, to be cultivated and enjoyed by the grantee hereditarily.

In a confirmatory document of 1788, the grantee was referred to as a resident of the said village.

The evidence showed that tenancies had been continually granted by the inamdars for short periods and at variable rents; that when tenancy lands were compulsorily acquired by Government, compensation was paid to the agraharamdar, and no claim thereto was put forward by the tenants. that in 1904 all the tenants formally relinquished their Lands to appellant and put them in his possession and that the property remained vacant till 1907 when the defendants were admitted as fen ints, they severally declaring that they had no right of occupancy except such as was given to them by the tenancy agreements and that the appellant might take possession of the lands at the end of the year of tenancy without any refinquishment by them.

it was also found in the suit on issues specially directed that the suit land was waste at the time of the grant of the inam and that at the time of the letting to the defendants they had no occupancy right.

Held, that the inam grant carried not the land-revenue alone, but the whole proprietary interest in the property. that the property was not an estate, within the meaning of the Madras Estates Land Act, 1908, that S. 189 of the Act did not apply, and that appellant could eject the defendants by a suit in the civil courts. Militaram-Grant only of-Evidence sheroing.

The plaintiff, the head of a mute, sued to eject the defendants, cultivating tenants, from the lands in their occupation in a certain cillage, which he alleged belonged to his must. The plaint alleged that, in 1743 the poligar of the estate within which the said village was situated, granted to the head of the mutt for the time being the village in question; and that since then the successive holders of the office had been in possession and enjoyment not only of the right to the meiwaram, but also to the right of the Kudiwaram.

The grant in favour of the plaintiff dld not in express terms grant to the mandar both the warams. It spoke of other villages held by the grantor which it might be inferred from the document was occupied by tenants, nor did it expressly say that only the melwaram right was granted to the donce. The defendants adduced evidence showing that they had been from time immemorial in possession of their holdings; that they had transferred their holdings wholly or in part, from time to time; that the lands had descended to their heirs in succession, and the descendants of the transferees were in possession; that they had partitioned the holdings amongst themselves; that they had made improvements, sunk wells and erected buildings thereon for huslandry and dwelling purposes, and had received compensation when any portion of their holdings were taken by Government for public purposes,

Hel 1, affirming the courts below, that the plaintiff did not possess the kudiwaram which he claimed, and that the defendants had clearly acquired their occupancy rights by prescription long before the Estates Land Act came into force. (Mr. Ameer Ali.) CHIDAMBARA SIVAPRAKASA

-The question was whether an inam grant of an agra haram, made more than 250 years before and recognised by the British Government, was a grant of both the Varams or was a grant of the Melvaram only. The District Munsif held that it was a grant of Melvaram only, relying on four main points. 272,-

(1) The grant purported to be a grant "of shrotriem" "as shrotriem". The final recital in the document was as follows:-" As we have granted to you the said agraharum you should enjoy the same from son to grandson, paying the shrotriem thereon and be happy."

(2) The grant was of a monje.

(3) The grantors were admittedly deshpandpas who were revenue officers or farmers of revenue under the paramount authority.

(4) The Brahmins represented by the grantee were learned Brahmins apparently not resident in the village granted, but resident about two miles away.

The High Court held, on the other hand, that the document was equally consistent with a grant of both the varams.

-The plaintiff, the head of a mutt, sued to eject the defendants from the lands in their occupation in a certain village, which he alleged belonged to the mutt of which he was the head. The defendants denied the right of the plaintiff to eject them, and alleged that he was only entitled to the melvaram and not to the kudivaram, and that the defendants had occupancy rights in the suit lands. On appeal to the Privy Council, the plaintiff contended, relying on the decisions in L. R. 45 L. A. 209 and L. R. 47 I. Neither in L. R. 45 I. A. 209 nor in L. R. 47 I. A. 76 is there a suggestion of a presumption in favour of the inamdar or pattadar on the one side or of the ryot on the other. In 44 M. 588 Full Bench, the learned Judges held that underlying the exposition of their Lordships in L. R. 45 I. A. & 47 I. A. such an initial presumption is to be inferred. Saranjam.

Distinction.

Much importance-and, in their Lordships opinion, too much importance - has been attached in the judgments of the courts below to the distinction between the term Inam and Saranjam. The learned Judges treat the lands of Satara referred to in one or two of the documents as Saranjam, by way, as they apprehend, of distinction from the other lands which are treated as Inam. In their Lordships' view, the terms are not mutually exclusive in the sense indicated. The latter term, namely, inam, is one of mere generic significance, applicable to a Government grant as a whole (214). (Lord Shaw.) RAGHOJIRAO SAHEB V. LAKSHMAN RAO SAHEB.

The plaintiffs appellants were or represented the Nattukottai Chetties called "the Nagarattars." The suit was brought by them against persons of a different caste, called "the Nattars". The object of the suit was to have it declared that the Nagarattars were entitled to the management of two pagodas devoted to the service of the Durga Goddess, whose particular title was Periyanayaki. They also claimed to have delivered over to them the possession of those pagodas, with the appurtenances consisting of ornaments and other articles relating to the worship of that idol.

The case made by the Nagarattars was that those pagodas were mere dependencies of a larger pagoda dedicated to the worship of Siva, of which they were the admitted managers; that the three pagodas had been supported out of the same funds; that they, the Nagarattars, had the administration of these funds; that the worship and all the services of the pagodas were performed by servants appointed by them; and that on the night of 28-4-1871, the defendants forced open the doors of the said Periyanayaki Amman's pagodas, and took possession of the said pagodas, and of the sacred jewels and other property. The cause of action was alleged to be the forcible dispossession. No evidence was, however, adduced of the said forcible entry and dispussession.

The Nattars, on the other hand, asserted that the pagodas in question where wholly distinct from the pagoda of Siva, and in no way connected, by worship or otherwise, with it.

The proceedings of the Inam Commission of 1863 however showed that the Nattars asserted that the pagoda of the Goddess Periyanayaki belonged to them, that the claim was acquiesced in by the Collector, and that the names of three Nattars were added as trustees in the inam patta.

Held that the proceedings of the Inam Commission turned the scale of the conflicting evidence in favour of the Nattars, and that the Nagarattars had not made out their right to disturb the possession which existed (222). ARU-MUGAM CHETTY P. PERIYANNAN SERVAL

INAM REGISTER—(Contd.)

The making of the Inam Register was no doubt for the ultimate purpose of determining whether or not the lands were tax free. But the preparation of this Register was a great act of State and its preparation and contents were the subject of much consideration under elaborately detailed reports and minutes. The Inam Commissioners through their officials made inquiry on the spot, heard evidence and examined documents, and with regard to each individual property the Government was put in possession not only of the conclusion come to as to whether the land was taxfree, but of a statement of the history and tenure of the property itself. Held, while such a report would not displace actual and authentic evidence in individual cases, ye. the Court, when such evidence is not available, cannot fail to attach the utmost importance, as part of the history of the propery, to the information set forth in the Inam Re-ARUNACHALLAM CHETTY P. gister. -Debts bad or doubtful-Deduction of, from income -Assesse's right to-Conditions-Jamaica Income-Tax Act of 1919-S 10-Construction.

Section 10 of the Income-Tax Act, 1919, Jamaica, which in many respects follows closely the provisions of the Income Tax Acts in England, provides:-

No deduction in respect of income shall be allowed in

(d) any debts, except bad debts, proved to be such to the satisfaction of the Assessment Committee, and doubtful debts to the extent that they are respectively estimated by the Assessment Committee to be bad. In the case of bankruptcy or insolvency of a debtor, the amount which may reasonably be expected to be received on any such delit shall be deemed to be the value thereof.

It was contended that the true meaning of the section was that debts might be deducted in the year in which they were found to be bad from the annual profits of that year, although the debt might have been long antecedently incurred, or in other words, that for the purposes of the statute the actual calculation of the annual profits in any particular year involved allowance for debts included in former accounts as good or doubtful but discovered as bad in the year under consideration.

Held that that contention could not be accepted (229).

S. 10 provides, in the first place, that in making up the account there cannot be a deduction for "any debts." This can only mean that the trader is not at liberty to limit the "income" which he returns to the amount actually received, but must estin ate the value of the debts that have accrued due to him in the year's trading. But the provision that so excludes him provides also that there should be exempted from this exclusion had debts proved to be such to the satisfaction of the Assessment Committee and doubtful debts to the extent to which they are estimated by the Assessment Committee to be had. Their Lordships think that this exception must apply to the general provision as to the debts, and that as the debts which may not be deducted are debts that have accrued due to to the taxpayer in the year's trading but have not been received, so the exception is out of that amount, and had and doubtful debts are, consequently, had or doubtful debts arising out of the year's trading and ascertained and determined to be bad or doubtful during that year. The investigation by the Assessment Committee of the debts is an investigation year by year, and when once they have been the subject of investigation, alteration is impossible, except under the provisions of the sections relating to appeal and further Passessment or the recovery of sums paid in excess (230). The med actually reterved if part of integric. The might well be argued that in the case of Topusiness, delity not actually received formed no part of the income at all, although, as is well-known the annual profits or gains of Ta trader are not properly measured by considering only the monies taken (229). #### INCOME-TAX-(Contd.)

Held that a voluntary expense incurred with a view to influencing public opinion against taking a step which would have depreciated and partly destroyed the profit bearing thing was not, within the true meaning of S. 86 (1) of the Act of 1916, exclusively incurred in the production of assessable income (226).

The expenditure in question was not necessary for the production of profit nor was it in fact incurred for that puroose. The expense may have been wisely undertaken, and may properly find a place, either in the balance-sheet or in the profit and loss account of the assessees; but this is not enough to take it out of the prohibition in S. 86 (1) (a) of the Act. For that purpose it must have been incurred for the direct purpose of producing profits (227). (Viscount Care.) WARD & CO., THE COMMISSIONER OF TAXES. (1922) 33 M. L. T. 225 P. C.

-Sale of whole concern at a profit-Liability of profit to tax.

Income-tax being a tax opon income, it is established that the sale of a whole concern which can be shown to be a sale at a profit as compared with the price given for the business, or at which it stands in the books, does not give rise to a profit taxable to income-tax. It is easy enough to follow out this doctrine where the business is one wholly or largely of production, such as a dairy farming business or a sheep rearing business, or even a manufacturing business, which was sold with the leaseholds and plant, even if these were added to the sale of the piece goods in stock, and even if those piece goads formed a very substantial part of the aggregate sold. Where, however, a business consists entirely in buying and selling, it is more difficult to distinguish between an ordinary and a realization sale, the object in either ca e being to dispose of goods at a higher price than that given for them, and thus to make a profit out of the business. The fact that large blocks of stock are sold does not render the profit obtained anything different in kind from the profit obtained by a series of gradual and smaller sales. This might even be the case if the whole stock was sold out in one sale. Even in the case of a realization sale, if there were an item which could be traced as representing the stock sold, the profit obtained by that sale, though made in conjunction with a sale of the whole consern, might conceivably be treated as taxable income. If a business be one of purely buying and selling, a profit made by the sale of the whole of the stock, if it stood by itself, might well be assessable to income-tax. The case is different where the sale was a slump transaction. (Lord Phillimore.) WILLIAM RICHARD DOUGHTY P. COM-MISSIONER OF TAXES (1927) A.I.R. (1927) P. C. 76-102 I. C. 17 (2).

In arriving at a conclusion as to what ars the interestbearing securities which form part of the assets of a business and are therefore to be treated as part of the capital within the meaning of S. 6 of the Indian Excess Profits Duty Act X of 1919, one guide may well be the difference of language between the later Indian and the earlier English Act. It is true that these are not Acts of the same legislature, and that the Indian Legislature and the draftsman whom it employed may have thought it unnecessary to introcluce provisions like those contained in paras, 8 and 12 of Part I of the Fourth Schedule of the English Act, and may have meant no variation from the scheme of the English Act when it and he introduced the words "securities" and spoke of interest on certain securities as being profits from the business. Too much stress, therefore, should not be laid on these differences. At the same time, it is noteworthy that the Indian Act takes notice of the English Act in Sch. I, para 4: and the Court may come to the conclusion that the reason for the differences between the two Acts is not a mere difference of drafting, but a deliberate variation due to the different conditions under which business is carried on in India and in England. The question what are the interest-bearing securities which form part of the assets of the business and are therefore to be treated as part of the capital within the meaning of S, 6 of the Excess Profits Duty Act, 1919, is not a pure question of fact upon which the decision of the Chief Revenue Authority would be conclusive. ## Income-Tax Act VII of 1918.

——S. 51—Case stated under—Decision of High Court on—Nature of—Privy Council appeal against—Right of.
An appeal does not lie to His Majesty in Council from the decision of the High Court (of Bombay) on a reference by case stated under S. 51 of the Indian Income-tax Act of

It is admitted that no statute, Imperial or Indian, is to be found giving, expressly, or by implication, a right of appeal. either with or without the leave of the High Court of Bombay, to His Majesty in Council from a decision or order made, or judgment given, by the High Court, under the provisions of S. 51 of the Indian Income-tax Act. 1918, neither can any such statute be found giving a general right of appeal to His Majesty in Council from the orders or judgments of any class of Courts as S. 3 of the English Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1876, gives a general right of appeal to the House of Lords from the judgments or orders of the Courts therein mentioned. Clause 39 of the Letters Patent of the High Court of Bombay cannot be relied upon as giving a right of appeal from the decision and order of the High Court under S. 51 of the Income-tax Act because the decision is not either a final judgment or a final decree or a final order within the meaning of that clause. The decision, judgment or order made by the Court under S. 51 of the Income-Tax Act is merely advisory, made by the Court in exercise of its consultative jurisdiction, and not in the proper and legal sense of the term final. No express provision for appeals to His Majesty in Council from orders of a High Court in India made upon references under S. 51 is to be found in that statute, but until the case of L. R. 50 I.A. 212 was decided by the Board, it was apparently generally supposed in India that appeals from such orders were regulated by Ss. 109 and 110 of C. P. C. of 1908. The effect of the judgment in the case cited was, however, definitely to lay it down that from these orders there was in fact no statutory right of appeal at all (423-4). (Lord Bianesburgh.) S. 51-Decision of High Court under-Nature of -

Revenue authority if bound to act up to.

The decision of the High Court under S. 51 is not an executive document directing something to be done or not to be done, but is merely the expression of the majority of the judges who heard the case, together with a statement of the grounds upon which those opinions are hased. It amounts only to a ruling that a certain deduction claimed by a taxpayer to be allowed from the sum for which Le has been already assessed to income tax is not permissible. Should the tax-payer be sued for the income-tax for which he has been assessed, proof of the assessment would be but the first step in the litigation, not the final one. These circumstances would go to show that however the decision or order right definitely and finally fix the amount of the assessment. it was only interlocutory. The Revenue authorities are undoubtedly bound to act up to the decision of the Court made under S. 51 of the Income Tax Act. (Lord Atkinson.) TATA IRON AND STEEL CO. P. Always supposing that there is a serious point of law to he considered, there does lie a duty upon the Chief Revenue Authority, under S. 51 of the Indian Income-Tax of 1918, to state a case for the opinion of the Court, and if he does not appreciate that there is such a serious point, it is in the power of the High Court, under S, 45 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, to control him and to order him to state a case. S. 106 (2) of the Government of India Act of 1915 does not exclude the power of the High Court, because its order to a revenue officer to do his statutory duty would not be the exercise of "original jurisdiction in any matter concerning the revenue" within the meaning of the earlier part of that clause, nor has the proceeding anything to do with the collection of the revenue within the meaning of the latter part of the clause. -S. 13-Undervaluation of opening and closing stocks of business-Ascertainment of real profits in case of -Mode of-Raising valuation of closing stock without considering amilar under-valuation of opening stock-Permissibility.

When the opening and closing stocks of a business are both undervalued, the real profits of the company of a particular year cannot be ascertained by merely raising the valuation of the closing stock, without taking into consideration the similar undervaluation of the opening stock.

The method of introducing stock into each side of a profit and loss account for the purpose of determining the annual profits is a method well understood in commercial circles and does not necessarily depend upon exact trade valuations being given to each article of stock that is so introduced, The one thing that is essential is that there should be a definite method of valuation adopted which should be carried through them from year to year, so that in case of any deviation from strict market values in the entry of the stock at the close of one year, it will be rectified by the accounts in the next year. It may, of course, be that in so adjusting the figures of stock there may be special cases in which the valuation is so treated as justly to cause it to be open to dispute. If the method of altering both valuations is not adopted, it is perfectly plain that the profit which is brought forward is not the real one. It may be more or it may be less, but it has no relation to the true profit if the stock is valued on one basis when it goes out without considering the value of the stock when it comes in.

The respondents were a company having their office in Bombay. A company called the Hongkong Trust Corporation, incorporated in Hongkong (hereinafter called the Hongkong Company), lent money, from time to time, on deposit to the respondents, and the respondents duly paid interest at the rate stipulated for on the money deposited. The Income-Tax Officer duly served a notice on the respondents in terms of S. 43 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, that he intended to treat them as agents of the Hongkong Company, and after hearing the respondents as to liability, he assessed them to income-tax as agents of the Hongkong Company in respect of the amount of interest in the year of charge.

Held, affirming the High Court, that the interest in question was a profit or gain accruing or arising to a person residing out of British India—to wit the Hongkong Company from a business connection in British India, and therefore falling under the words of S. 42 of the Act.

Held further, reversing the High Court, that the respondents could be treated as the "agent" of the Hongkong Company for the purpose of S. 42 of the Act in respect of the interest so paid by them to the Hongkong Company and could be deemed to be assessee under S. 42 in respect of any income-tax which might be levied on such interest and to be the 'agent' of the Hongkong Company under Ss. 42 & 43 of the Act, in respect of interest payable on such loan and in respect of any income-tax that might be chargeable on such interest.

If S. 42 stood alone "agent" in that section would mean an agent in actual receipt of the profits or gains which were to be assessed, but S. 43 puts the person—who comes within its term artificially into the position of the agent and of assessee under S. 42. The appeal given by S. 66-A of the Indian Income-Tax of 1922 (added by the Indian Income-Tax Amendment Act of 1926) is by sub-S. 2 of that section confined to a case which the High Court certifies "to be a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council." These words are textually the same as the concluding words of S. 109 (c) of C.P.C. of 1908, and, coupled with the carefully limited referential words to the C.P.C. in sub-S. 3, suffice to exclude from any right of appeal cases which fall within the requirements of S. 110 of the Code, and are operative to confine that right to cases which are certified to be otherwise fit for appeal to His Majesty in Council. The words of qualification, "so far as may be," in sub-S. 3 of S. 66-A are apt to confine the statutory right of appeal to the cases described in sub-S. 2 (424.5). (Lord Blanesburgh.) -Right of, against decision made before Act of 1926 came into force.

No appeal lies to His Majesty in Countil under S. 66-A of the Income-Tax Act of 1922 (added by Act XXIV of 1926) from a decision of the High Court (upon a case stated under S. 66 of the Income-Tax Act of 1922) made before the Act of 1926 came into force (425).

There is in S. 66-A a clear suggestion that a judgment of the High Court referred to in sub-S. (2) of that section is one which under sub-S. (1) has been pronounced by "not less than two judges of the High Court" a condition which was not itself operative until the entire section came into force (425-6). (Land Blanesburgh.) Regulation 31 of 1802.

The fact that rulers in India generally collected their land revenues by taking a share of the produce of the land is not by itself evidence that the soil of lands in India was not owned by them and could not be granted by them; indeed, that fact would support the contrary assumption, that the soil was vested in the rulers who drew their land revenue from the soil, generally in the shape of a share in the produce of the soil, which was not a fixed and invariable share, but depended on the will of the rulers (216). In the absence of reliable evidence no court is entitled to make the assumption that in the times when the Reddi Kings ruled in the Northern Circars the ownership of the soil of land in India was not in the sovereign or ruler, and that the right of the ruler was confined to a right to receive as revenue a share in the produce of the soil from the cultivator. ## Land-Revenue system in.

-Basis of.

The land revenue system in India is founded upon the notion that the State is entitled to receive a certain portion of the produce of all lands not especially exempted from assessment. Of course, some Governments have been more exacting than others, but the general action of Native Governments was to take a certain proportion (125). (Sir James W. Celvile.) VASUDEY SADASHIV MODAK v. Religion pervading and governing.

In India, all or almost all, the great religious communities of the world exist, side by side, under the impartial rule of the British Government. While Brahmin Buddhist, Christian, Mahomedan, Parsee, and Sikh are one nation, enjoying equal political rights and having perfect equality before the tribunals, they co-exist as separate and very distinct communities having distinct laws affecting relation of life. The law of husband and wife, parent and child, the descent, devolution, and disposition of property are all different, depending, in each case, on the body to which the individual is deemed to belong; and the difference of religion pervades and governs all domestic usages and social relations (323.) ment therein of a native jurisdiction ander British supervi sion and control. But this could not be done without a Legislative Act, which, in this case, was never passed (152.)

By the Imperial Statute 3 and 4 Will C. 85, S. 43, a general power of legislation (with certain exceptions not material for this purpose) was given to the Governor General in Council as to (among other things) " all courts of justice, whether established by His Majesty's charters or otherwise, and the jurisdiction thereof." This power is, in substance, continued by 24 and 25 Vict C. 67, S. 22, though the particular clause of the former statute is thereby repealed. By the 24 and 25 Vict. C. 104, S. 9, the High Courts of the several Presidencies were established, with such jurisdiction as Her Majesty should by her letters-patent confer upon them; and under the same statute each of those courts was also to have and to exercise, " save as by Her Majesty's letters-patent might be otherwise directed, and subject to the legislative powers in relation to the matters aforesaid of the Governor-General in Council," all jurisdiction, power, and authority previously vested in any of the East India Company's Courts within the same Presidency which were abolished by that Act. It is unnecessary to refer to later enactments, which only modified these provisions in a way not affecting the present case. The jurisdiction, therefore, of the Courts of the Bombay Presidency over Gangli rested, in 1866, upon British Statutes, and could not be taken away or altered (so long as Gangli remained British territory) so as to substitute for it any native or other extraordinary jurisdiction, except by legislation in the manner contemplated by those statutes (152.) Conditional legislation by-Not ultra vires.

Where plenary powers of legislation exist as to particular subjects, whether in an imperial or in a provincial Legislature, they may be well exercised, either absolutely or condtionally. Legislation, conditional on the use of particular powers, or on the exercise of a limited discretion, entrusted by the Legislature to persons in whom it places confidence, is no uncommon thing; and, in many circumstances, it may be highly convenient. The British Statute Book abounds with examples of it; and it cannot be supposed that the Imperial Parliament did not, when constituting the Indian Legislature, contemplate this kind of conditional legislation as within the scope of the legislative powers which it from time to time conferred. It certainly used no words to exclude it. There are many important instances of such legislation in India. Among them are the great Codes of Civil and of Criminal Procedure. By S. 385 of C. P. C. of 1859. it is provided that "this Act shall not take effect in any part of the territories not subject to the gene al regulations of Bengal, Madras, and Bombay, until the same shall be extended thereto by the Governor General in Council " (not in his legislative capacity), " or by the local Government to which such territory is subordinate, and notified in the Gazette." --- Legislative power not created or authorized by Council's Act-Creation of-Power of.

The Governor-General in Council could not, by any form of enactment, create, in India, and arm with general legislative authority, a new legislative power, not created or authorized by the Council's Act (194). (Lord Selborne.) THE QUEEN P. BURAH. (1878) 5 I. A. 178=

Position and powers of-Legislation by-Validity of - Jurisdiction of civil courts to decide on-Points for consideration in such case.

The Indian Legislature has powers expressly limited by the Act of the Imperial Parliament which created it, and it can, of course, do nothing beyond the limits which circumscribe these powers. But, when acting within those limits, it is not in any sense an agent or delegate of the Imperial Parliament, but has, and was intended to have, plenary powers of legislation, as large, and of the same nature, as those of Parliament itself. The established courts of Justice, when a question arises whether the prescribed limits have been exceeded, must of necessity determine that question; and the only way in which they can properly do so, is by looking to the terms of the instrument by which, affirmatively, the legislative powers were created, and by which, negatively, they are restricted. If what has been done is legislation, within the general scope of the affirmative words which give the power, and if it violates no express condition or restriction by which that power is limited (in which category would, of course, be included any act of the Imperial Parliament at variance with it), it is not for any Court of Justice to inquire further, or to enlarge constructively those conditions and restrictions, (1934). -Nature of Jurisdiction of Court to grant-Disobedience of injunction-Liability for contempt for.

A Court, which has jurisdiction over all the parties to an action, has jurisdiction to restrain them by an interim injunction from doing any of the acts complained of; its order and injunction operates in personam, and compels the party forbidden to do any act, whether the receipt of money or the like, to refrain from doing it, whoever the party may be, and whatever his rights may ultimately prove to be. The existence of such a jurisdiction has been part of the equitable jurisdiction of our Courts for centuries, and is necessary for the safe preservation of the subject-matter of the action until the rights of the parties can be finally determined. It is a misconception to speak of the order and injunction of the Court in such a case as only permissive; it is, of course, interlocutory, not final, but it is binding on all parties to the order so long as it remains undischarged, and although it cannot bind Government (not a party to the suit) not to pay or make the Government responsible for that obedience to the law which the Court is entitled to expect, the party who receives in breach of the order is guilty of a contempt in no way cured by the payment by the Government. - Disobedience of Liability for contempt for No injunction restraining giver-Effect.

Their Lordships differ entirely from the statement that an injunction under which the hand giving may be innocent, and the hand receiving guilty, would be an anomaly not in accord with the policy of the law which developed the power of injunction. Such an injunction is, on the contrary, in accordance with ordinary practice and well-settled princi-ples. If a claimant to an inalienable Government pension succeeded in persuading the Court in this country that he had a prima facic claim to it, and obtained an interim injunction, the true owner of the pension could be committed for contempt if he received his money in defiance of the order, although the Crown was no party to the litigation, and paid in disregard or ignorance of the order. The Batavian representatives of the estate of G, were not, however, made parties to the suit, and they were not subject to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.

In a case in which real estate of the insolvent in Java was held not to pass by an assignment under S. 9 of the Indian Insolvent Act, 9 Geo. We are not however able to see in what way that could have been accomplished by the law of England in force at Calcutta; there is no statement that it could have been done by the law in force at Java; as to the law of England, assuming that it did not pass, we have the authority of Lord Eldon in the analogous case of an English Commission of Bankruptcy, that a bankrupt could not be coappelled directly to assign his foreign real estate to his assignees, and though there are indirect methods, as withholding their certificate, or by creditors assigning their debts to others in order to obtain execution against the real estates, neither of these are in the power of the assigness, as such, nor would the first of them seem to be in any case properly applied (387-8). Their Lordships are of opinion, that before obtaining leave from the Insolvent Court to prosecute this soit, the true nature of the case should have been explained, and ihe Insolvent Court should have had an opportunity of exercising its controlling judgment upon the propriety of the Official Assignee lend-

-Accounts on setting aside of transfer-Principle of

The assignee of A, who became insolvent in the year

1867, brought a suit against the appellant to recover assets alleged to belong to the insolvent's estate, of which the appellant had wrongfully become possessed.

The insolvent had a business at Hong Kong, and his two brothers, one of whom was the appellant, also carried on business at the same place in partneeship. By the middle of 1866 the insolvent was in very embarrassed circumstances. In September, 1866, he absconded so as to conceal himself from his creditors. His petition in insolvency was presented on 17-12-1866, and he was adjudicated on 7-1-1867. Pending those transactions, that is to say, on 1-1-1867, between the date of the petition and the date of the adjudication, the whole of the insolvent's assets at Hong Kong were handed over by his manager to the firm of his brothers, and his books were also handed over. The transfer was a voluntary one and bad against the creditors,

On setting aside the transfer the first Court directed a general account of the dealings between the appellant's firm and the insolvent. The appellate Court limited that account, by directing that it should only commence with the assets received after the date of the insolvency.

Held that the appellate Court went upon a right principle and its decree ought not to be varied in that respect (6-7). (Lord Hobhonic). RAHIMBHOY HUBIBBHOY P. TURNER. (1892) 20 I.A. 1=17 B. 341 (348-9)=6 Sar. 256.

The appellant, the Official Assignee of Calcutta, was appointed assignee of the estate of an insolvent firm, by an order of the High Court of Calcutta, on 22-12-1875, when the members of the firm were adjudged insolvents. The respondent was a banker at Cawnpore. The appellant seed to recover from the respondent Rs. 9,436 and interest, which he asserted had been collusively and fraudulently assigned to him by B, one of the insolvents, and on a date subsequent to 22-12-1875. The respondent contended that the money was assigned bona fide previous to the said date, in due course of business and in liquidation of debts previously and at the time due to him by the firm.

The Sub-Judge threw the onus on the respondent of proving that the transfer was made on a date prior to the insolvency.

Their Lordships were not prepared to say that the Sub-Judge was right as to the burden of proof (111-2). Richard Couch.) MILLER p. SHEO PERSHAD.

- Frandulent transfer-Issue as to-Voluntary transfer-Attack of transfer as a-Permissibility-Statement by plaintiff subsequent to issue of intention to attack transfer on that ground-Issue net recasted.

The plaintiff, the Official Assignee of Calcutta, sued, as the assignee of the estate and effects of an insolvent firm, for the recovery from the defendant of the amount of a debt due to the firm on the ground that it had been collusively and fraudulently assigned to him by one of the insolvents on a date subsequent to the insolvency. The issue raised in the case with regard to the point was, "when did the transfer of the principal sum in suit take place? Is the transfer unlawful, and was it fraudulently made or not?" On a subsequent date but before evidence was taken the trial judge questioned the pleaders of both parties. and recorded that the plaintiff's pleader stated that the plaintiff claimed to have the transfer declared invalid, on the grounds,--

1. That it was really made after the involvency, and was made fraudulently.

2. Even granting that the transfer took place before the insolvency, it was voluntarily made, and was invalid under S. 24 of the Indian Insolvency Act.

The trial Judge did not, however, make any alteration in he issues which he had recorded.

Held that an alteration in the issues was not necessary, and that the question whether the transfer was voluntary and fraudulent and void as against the assignce was sufficiently raised (105-6). Creditor's receipt of Infunction restraining Suit by assignce for-Jurisdiction-Insolvency Court-Other Courts.

The respondent was the Indian representative of the estate of G, a creditor of a person who had been adjudged an insolvent under the Indian Insolvency Act. There were foreign representatives of the estate of G. Those representatives had realised part of the debt due by the insolvent to the estate of G by taking proceedings against real estate of the insolvent in those places and were taking steps to realize the balance from debtors of the insolvent in those places. Alleging that the sum realized by the said representatives represented more than the sum to which the estate of G was or might be entitled by way of dividend, the assignee in insolvency instituted a suit in the Supreme Court of Calcutta on its Equity side against the respondent for, inter alia, an injunction restraining the respondent from suing for, demanding, or recovering any future dividend from the estate of the insolvent, until all his other creditors had received proportionate dividends.

On a contention raised by the respondent, that the jurisdiction to grant such a relief was vested only in the Insolvency Court and could be had only by a petition presented to that Court, and the Supreme Court, on its Equity side, had no jurisdiction to grant such relief, held that the Insolvency Court had not, under the 9th Geo. iv. c. 73, jurisdiction to determine such matters on petition, and that even assuming it had such jurisdiction, its jurisdiction was not (Mr. Baron Parke). tatives of G recovered a sum of Rs. 1.50,134, a sum greatly exceeding the amount of all the dividends declared, or likely to be declared, on the debt of Rs. 2,52,460.

In the meantime, and before the process against the real estate in Java, the Bengal representatives of G received from the plaintiffs dividends amounting to Rs. 71,793 on the whole debt.

On a bill filed by the plaintiffs against the respondent, the then Bengal representative of G, for a refund of all the dividends received by him or his predecessors in interest, and for an injunction restraining the respondent from recovering, or attempting to recover, any further dividends from the estate of P. & Co., until all the other creditors of P. & Co. had received dividends on their debts proportionate to, and in the like ratio as, the sum realized by the representatives of G in the island of Java, or which had been or might be realized by them in other places, held that the respondent could neither be compelled refund the money obtained by means of the real estate, or the dividends received on the debt, or be restrained from receiving those thereafter to become due (386-7).

The principle is, that one creditor shall not take a part of the fund which otherwise would have been available for the payment of all the creditors, and at the same time be allowed to come in pari passu with the other creditors for satisfaction out of the remainder of that fund; and this principle does not apply where that creditor obtains by his diligence something which did not and could not form a part of that fund (387). above complained." Two days after pleading that plea, the defendant gave the plaintiff notice in writing, that he intended to dispute the trading, petitioning creditor's debt, and the act of bankruptcy. The plaintiff not only did not object that the notice was irregular because it was dated two days after the plea appeared by the record to have been pleaded, but, treating the notice as regular, he endeavoured to prove his title by the assignment. Upon that plea issue was joined, and the trial Court gave a verdict for the plaintiff, liberty being reserved to the defendant to move to enter a non-suit. On a motion subsequently made by the defendant, the verdict was set aside, and a judgment of non-suit was entered with costs.

On objection taken by the plaintiff in appeal to the P. C. to the regularity of the notice, held that the plaintiff must be deemed to have waived his objection, if any, to the irregularity of the notice (291-2).

Held further that the statutory provisions respecting notice did not extend to India, and that the plea of nonassumpsit put the bankruptcy and assignment in issue sufficiently without any notice (291-2). (Lord Brougham.) JAMES CLARK v. BABOO ROUPLAUL MULLICK.

On 4-7-1826 a Commission of Bankruptcy, under the Great seal of Great Britain, was issued against one S. under which he was duly declared a bankrupt. Two persons were chosen assignees of his estate, and the usual assignment was executed to them by the commissioners.

In a suit brought in the Supreme Court of Calcutta by the surviving assignee of S upon promises made to the bankrupt by the testator, the plaintiff gave in evidence a paper, purporting to be a copy of the proceedings in England, endorsed with the signature of a person stated to be clerk of the Enrolments, and sealed with a seal purporting to be that of the Court of Bankruptcy. No other proof was given of the trading, act of banksuptcy, or petitioning creditor's debt, nor of the commission or assignment. The paper produced was not proved to be a copy of the proceedings in England, nor was the scal proved to be that of the Court of Bankruptcy. There was evidence given of trading in India, but not coming down later than 1824. The promissory notes on which action was brought were proved to have been made by the defendant, as also the death of the other assignee, and the plaintiff's survivorship.

On objection taken by the defendant, held that the proceedings were not receivable at all, to prove the facts stated in them, and that even otherwise, the papers purporting to set them forth were not authenticated either by the evid nce of those who had examined them with the originals, or by proof of the seal under which they were said to be exempli-fied (290-1).

Held further that the depositions would, in any event, have not been sufficient to support the plaintiff's title, inasmuch as they failed to show a trading after the Statute 6th

Geo. iv, C. 16., came into operation (291).

The statutes which have been made to facilitate the proof of the bankruptcy and assignment in the English Courts do not extend to the Courts of India. The provisions respecting evidence, in the statutes 6th Geo. iv, C. 16, and 2nd and 3rd Will. iv, C. 114, do not extend to the Courts of India; and In those courts, evidence must be given such as would have been required to prove the facts had no such statutory Regu. t in British India-Maintainability.

The surviving assignee of Thomas Shepherd, a bankrupt, adjudged under an English Commission, brought an action of assumpsit against a debtor of the bankrupt resident within the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Calcutta upon promises made by him to the bankrupt. The defendant pleaded the general issue, and in that plea denied that he undertook and promised in manner and form as the said plaintiff, assignee as aforesaid, hath above complained."

It was contended that the form of the plea admitted the plaintiff's title, by admitting him to be assignee. It was further argued that his capacity of assignee could not be disputed, because it was not specially traversed by the defendant.

Held, that the manner in which the plea was framed did not import such an admission as was contended for (289).

The introduction (wholly unnecessary, no doubt, and very unusual) of the words "Assignee as aforesaid, does not appear to their Lordships to be an adoption of the description given by the plaintiff of the character in which he brings his suit; it is not an admission that he is entitled to sue as assignee, but only a reference to the description which he has given of himself; as if he had said, "Thomas Wyatt, who sues as alleging himself to be assignee of Thomas Shepherd" (289-90). French insolvency-(Cont.)

The plaintiff instituted a suit against the defendant in the District Court of South Arcot on a judgment by default obtained by the plaintiff against the defendant in Pondicherry in a suit instituted on a promissory note.

The defendant's firm was declared insolvent, at the instance of other creditors, by the Pondicherry Court; and the insolvency was declared to have effect from a date anterior to the plaintiff's judgment, and indeed to the commencement of the action in which it was obtained. In the insolvency proceedings syndics were appointed as usual, and the plaintiff applied for payment out of the estate; but it did not appear that he obtained payment of any dividend. The question was whether the French judgment on which the suit was brought according to French Law was null and void on the date of suit, and whether the suit in the Arcot Court based on the French judgment, therefore, was not sustainable.

Semble the decision of the Judicial Committee in Quelin v. Morisson (1 Knapp, 265) went far to show that the insolvency would afford a defence (229).

The conclusion arrived at by their Lordships on the other points in the case renders it unnecessary to consider the effect of the defendant's insolvency either on the validity of the judgment such on or of the insolvency affording a defence to the action if the judgment is still in force (229). - Acts of Principal's insolvency founded on-Vali-

The High Court lay down in broad terms "that a man cannot commit any act of bankruptcy by an act of his agent, which he has not authorized, and of which act he had no cognizance." The meaning of the learned Judges evidently is that for the act in question the agent raust have specific authority, and that the authority cannot flow out of his general position.

So understood their Lordships cannot assent to the principle laid down by the High Court. They cannot hold that the creditors of firms exclusively managed by gomasthas have no remedy by way of insolvency, whatever the gomastha may do; though he may make fraudulent conveyances, promote fraudulent executions, or, as in Hurruck's case, "levant, leaving the creditors to find him or his master if they could." And yet that consequence must follow if the principle laid down by the High Court, in this case be the true one. It is a question in each case whether the gomasta occupies such a position that the owner must stand or fall by his acts, so that his fraud or his flight shall by imputation be the fraud or the flight of the owner or multitude of owners, for the purpose of bringing their case within the Statute of Insolvency (11 & 12 Vict. C. 21). Their Lordships agree with the Judges who have held that the statute admits of application to such cases, and that to exclude it may lead to injustice and confusion in many cases (169-70). of insolvency relied upon was that on two days the respondent's principal gomashta, and other gomashtas and servants, departed and were absent from his place of business at Calcutta with intext to defeat the respondent's creditors. It appeared that the respondent was an active and responsible owner, that his residence and head Koti at another place were well-known, that he occasionally went to Calcutta and to the Koti, that when difficulties arose, the principal gomashta applied to him to meet them, and that, when payment was suspended, the principal gomashta, openly by himself or by his servants, told the creditors that his principal was coming and that they must wait for his action.

Held, that, even if the principal gomashta had departed from the usual place of business within the meaning of S. 9 of the Indian Insolvency Act, his act would not be the act of the Respondent on which he could be adjudged an insolvent (170).

On 19.8-1868, the Insolvency Court of Bombay ordered that a judgment should be entered up in the name of the Official Assigneec against the insolvent N for a certain sum. That judgment was accordingly entered up in the High Court. It did not appear whether anything was done under the judgment till 5-4 1886, when the Insolvency Court ordered execution for a portion of the amount to be taken out against certain properties described in the order. The representatives of the insolvent, being summoned to show cause why the judgment should not be executed, assigned as cause that under the operation of the Limitation Act of 1877, the right to have execution was barred by lapse of

Held that the judgment of 1868 was entered up by the High Court, not by way of special or discretionary action, but in the ordinary course of the duty cast upon it by law, according to which every other case of the same kind would be dealt with; that it was therefore entered up in exercise of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Court; that under S. 86 of the Indian Insolvency Act no present right accrued to the Official Assignee to move for execution until the order of the 5th of April, 1886, was made; and that his application, which was made a few days afterwards, was well within time under Art. 180 of the Limitation Act of 1877 (162.3).

From the material statutes and charters, it appears that, although the Insolvency Court determines the substance of the questions relating to the insolvent's estate, such as the amount of the judgment to be entered up against him, and the propriety of issuing execution upon it, the proceedings in execution are the proceedings of the High Court and the judgment itself is the judgment of the High Court. And it is clearly entered up in the exercise of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Court, and not by way of special or disciplinary action (162). (Lord Hobboure.) -Abandonment of speculation the result of which is still uncertain if a.

There is nothing fraudulent or improper in an insolvent Firm parting with or putting an end to a current speculation. the result of which is still uncertain, on the best terms they are able. On the contrary, such a course is an Lonest one to follow. If an honest man discovers he cannot pay a bet if he loses, and is ready to rescind the bet before the event happens, he is not bound to take the chance of winning for the benefit of his creditors. The rescission and abandonment of a speculation, whilst the result is still uncertain, is a totally differing thing from preferring one creditor to others after a debt has been incurred (231-2). ## TRADER INSOLVENT-ASSIGNMENT OF ALL HIS ASSETS BY-VALIDITY AGAINST ASSIGNEE OF.

-Assignment for substantial simultaneous advance and promise of future advances-Effect.

The question was whether a mortgage deed of the 11th of March, 1889, was valid against the assignee in insolvency of the mortgagors, partners in a trading firm.

Prior to the mortgage, the mortgagees had assisted the mortgagors, either by payments or by incurring liabilities on promissory notes for them, to the extent of Rs. 30,000. At the time of the mortgage more assistance was given. Simultaneously with the mortgage the defendants' firm did receive, in the form of a joint promissory note signed by themselves and by the mortgagees, further assistance to the extent of Rs, 25,000. They also received an undertaking for further accommodation, amounting in the whole to a lakh of rupees. That promissory note, like at least one, if not more, of the former ones, was payable on demand; but there was an understanding that it should not be presented until some later date. It was, in fact, presented in the month of September, 1889. It was not taken up by the mortgagors, and it was taken up by the mortgagees. There was, therefore, substantially an advance of Rs. 25,000 simultaneously with the mortgage. The further accommodation to the extent of a lakh of rupees was not made, on account of a subsequent agreement.

Held that the deed must be held to be valid (18-9).

TRADER INSOLVENT—ASSIGNMENT OF ALL HIS ASSETS BY—VALIDITY AGAINST ASSIGNEE OF—(Contd.)

Their Lordships are not aware of any case in which, a simultaneous advance of a large amount being made and future support being promised of a large amount, the validity of such a deed has been seriously called in question. In this case the simultaneous advance was nearly as much as the pre-existing debt, and the undertaking to give feture advances was considerably more (19). (Level Hobbouse.) KHOO KWAT SIEW P. -Assignment for substantial simultaneous advance and promise of future advances—Test of validity of—Intention that trader should carry on his butiness if a.

The question was whether a mortgage deed was valid against the assignee in insolvency of the mortgagors, partners in a trading firm. The consideration for the deed was, inter alia, a substantial simultaneous advance and a promise of large advances in future. It was argued for the assignee that the proper test of the validity of the deed was, whether it was the intention of the parties that the trader giving such a security should carry on his business.

Held that the question hardly arose except in those cases where the amount of additional assistance given at the time of the mortgage was so small as to create a doubt whether it was substantial, in which cases there would be an inquiry into the motives of the parties, whether they did really intend that the business should be carried on or not, but that it was impossible to raise such a question in cases where the amount of simultaneous and future advance was very large (19). (Lend Hobbious). KHOO KWAT SIEW 5. WOOI TAIK HWAT. (1891) 19 I.A. 15—19 C. 223 (231-2)—6 Sar. 98.

-Rule-Exception,

The well-known rule of law is, that if a trader assigns all his property, except on some substantial contemporaneous payment, or some substantial undertaking to make payment in future, that is an act of bankruptcy, and is void against the creditors and the assignee simply because nothing is left with which to carry on his business; whereas if he receives substantial assistance something is left to carry on the business (18). Assignment by of goods described as being in certain ware-houses to secure loan—Validity—Goods not all in ware-houses specified at date of assignment—Loan not advanced at that date, but advanced subsequently in instalments—Effect.

A gave to the appellant a bill of sale and assignment of goods, described as being in certain warehouses belonging to A, as security for the loan of a sum expressed to have been paid on the day of the date thereof. Very shortly after, A was, under the provisions of the Act, 9 Geo, IV, C. 73, entitled, "An Act to provide for the relief of Insolvent Debtors in the East Indies," adjudged by the Insolvent Debtors' Court to have committed an act of insolvency; and on the following day the respondent was duly appointed assignee of As estate and effects. The respondent then seized the goods purporting to have been assigned to the appellant, whereupon the appellant brought an action of trover against the respondent.

It appeared, in evidence, that a portion only of the goods was in the ware house specified at the date of the sale, that no part of the loan was paid on that day, and that the same was paid by instalments a few days afterwards.

The Supreme Court held, in view of the above evidence, that there had been no valid transfer, and consequently no conversion, and gave a verdict for the defendant, on the ground that the evidence given by the appellant did not support the written document set up by him as the foundation of his case, but was in contradiction to it.

Held, reversing the Court below, that the appellant was entitled to a new trial, as the Court below had not weighed all the circumstances in evidence, with sufficient accuracy to justify the verdict it had given. (Dr. Lushington.) MUTTY-LOLL SEAL P. ROBERT O'DOWDA.

The plaintiff-appellant was the assignee of the estate of an insolvent co-partnership. He sued to recover from the defendant-respondent Rs. 9,000 and odd with interest, which he asserted had been collusively and fraudulently assigned to him by one of the insolvents, and on a date subsequent to 22—12—1875, when the order of adjudication was made; or, if in fact assigned before that date, that it was assigned "voluntarily" within the meaning of S. 24 of the Insolvent Act, and therefore under S. 24 fraudulent and void as against him.

It appeared, as regards three sums of Rs. 2,500 each, that they were the amounts of three hundis drawn by one of the insolvent's firms upon another of them. Those hundis were drawn in favour of P, as the defendant's agent, and had been discounted by him, and were on the 20th of December in the hands of third persons. They were subsequently taken up by the defendant, or debited to him by the There was thus a contingent liability on the part of the defendant on those hundis, and on the 21st of December the parties must have had full knowledge that they would be dishonoured.

Their Lordships were not prepared to say that the transfer, so far as it provided the defendant with funds to meet the hundis, would, as a matter of law, be voluntary within the meaning of the Insolvent Act (109-110). (Sir Richard

The question was whether the transfer to the defendant was, as alleged by hlm, made on 20-12-1875. The Subordinate Judge put the burden of proof of this upon the

A firm trading at Calcutta stopped payment on a certain night, and was adjudicated insolvent two days after. One of its branches located at Lucknow transferred, on the day on which the firm stopped payment, a debt due to it to the defendant. The official Assignee instituted the suit out of which the appeal arose for the recovery of the amount from the defendant on the ground that such transfer was "voluntary" within the meaning of S. 24 of the Insolvency

The transfer was made by means of a draft dated the day on which payment was stopped, and purported to have been made by the debtor of the Lucknow branch under its assignment in favour of the defendant to the amount of such debt. The greater part of the amount thus transferred was to put the defendant (who had accepted certain hundis of the firm) in funds to meet such hundis. It also appeared that there was great delay in entering up the amounts transferred in the books of the various parties,

Held, on the evidence in, and the probabilities of, the case, that the transfer was "voluntary" within the meaning of the Insolvency Act and therefore void as against the

A firm of traders carried on business at Amritsar and other places in the Punjab, and also at Bombay and elsewhere. On the application of a creditor, the Amritsar Insolvency Court, in the presence of four out of the five members of the said firm, made an order declaring them insolvent, and requiring them to furnish security, and to put in lists of property, creditors, and debtors.

Subsequently, all the members of the firm were, on an application by other creditors, adjudicated insolvent by the High Court of Bombay under 11 & 12 Vict. C. 21, and a vesting order was made at the same time, vesting the property of the debtors in the Official Assignee of Bombay.

Under the Imperial Act 11 and 12 Vict. C. 21, when an adjudication was made by the court, the estate of the debtor vested in the Official Assignee, and he was to administer it; while, under the Punjab Laws Act IV of 1872 (S. 27). no transfer of property took place, what was entrusted to the Punjab Court being merely administration.

On a question arising as to whether the property of the debtors in the Punjab passed under the vesting order of the Bombay Court, and whether the Official Assignee of Bombay, or the Insolvent Court at Amritsar, was entitled to realise and administer it, held that the property of the insolvents in the Punjab was vested in the Official Assignee of Pombay. IV, C. 73; by S. 36 of which it was declared, that where there had been mutual credit given by the insolvents and any other person, one debt or demand might be set-off against the other; and that all such debts as might be proved under a commission of bankruptcy in England might be proved in the same manner under the Indian Act. At the time of the adjudication or insolvency, the Bank were also holders of two pronotes of P & Co., which they had discounted for them before the transaction of the loan, and the agreement as to the deposit of the Company's paper. The time for the repay-ment of the loan having expired, the Bank sold the Company's paper, the proceeds of which, after satisfying the principal and interest due on the loan, produced a considerable surplus.

Systems of, in India.

Imperial and local acts relating to-Scopes of.

Under the Imperial Act of Parliament, 11 and 12 Vict., C. 21, relating to insolvency proceedings before what are now the High Courts in the Presidency towns in India, jurisdiction is conferred on those courts extending over the whole of India, and for many purposes over much wider limits.

Under the Punjab Laws Act, IV of 1872, in a series of sections beginning with S. 22, the Legislature of the Governor-General in Council has created a system of insolvency of its own, but, of course, such an Act can be effective only within the ambit prescribed by the Act.

There is, indeed, a third system in India, embodied in Chapter 20 of the C. P. C. of 1882. (Sir Arthur Wilson.) OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE. BOMBAY P. REGISTRAR, SMALL CAUSE COURT, AMRITSAR. (1910) 37 I. Possession of premises damaged by fire taken and held by company under—Damages to goods of assured during period of—Company's liability for—Damage caused by water used to extinguish fire.

An insurance company taking and holding possession of premises damaged by fire under the provisions of the policy in that behalf does so in its own interest for the purpose of enabling it to minimise the damage and not because it is under a duty to the assured. Its powers are of the nature of a privilege to do that which is most for its own benefit under the circumstances so as to reduce the loss. But when the company has so taken possession of the premises and done what in its opinion was wisest to minimise the damage, it cannot say that the actual damage is not the natural and direct consequence of the fire.

Where an insurance company took and held possession of premises damaged by fire under the provisions of the policy in that behalf and it was found that the premises were damaged not only by the water employed to extinguish the fire but also by the water being allowed to lie on the machinery thereafter and during the period the company was in possession, held that the company was liable for the loss caused till the moment of its delivery of the premises to the assured, i.e., for the loss caused by the water being allowed to lie on the machinery after the extinguishment of the fire, and not merely for the loss caused till the moment of the extinguishment of the fire. It was objected, that if there was a total loss, the notice of adandonment was not given within a reasonable time. What is a reasonable time, in a case of this description, must depend upon the particular circumstances of each case. On the one hand the assured is not to delay his notice when a total loss occurs, in order to keep his chance of doing better for himself by keeping the subject insured, and then, when he finds it will be more to his advantage to do so, throwing the burden upon the underwriters; while, on the other, the underwriters cannot complain of a suspense of judgment fairly exercised on the part of the assured, to enable him to determine whether the circumstances are such as to entitle him to abandon (312).

Held, on the evidence, that there was no unreasonable delay in giving the notice of abandonment (312-3). (Lord Chelmsford.) CURRIE AND CO. v. BOMBAY NATIVE INSU-(1869) 6 Moo. P.C. (N.S.) 302-L.R. 3 P.C. 72=39 L.J. P.C. 1 = 22 L.T. 317= RANCE CO. 18 W.R. 296 Eng.

-Assured's right to recover upon-Evidence.

The appeal arose out of a suit brougt by the appellants to recover the amount of two Policies of Insurance effected by them with the respondents upon the " cargo " and " disbursements" respectively of the ship Northland, upon a voyage from Moulmein to Madras. The Policies were against total loss only.

The evidence was to the effect that, the ship having become a wreck, the captain, without taking any steps to save or discharge the cargo, deeming it impracticable, proceeded to dismantle the ship, and gave notice to the Insurers of abandonment of the cargo, and sold both ship and cargo by public auction, and that a large part of the cargo was afterwards saved.

The Court below held that, as the cargo might have been, and was, in fact, partially saved, there was no such total loss of the cargo and freight as entitled the assured to recover on either of the Policies,

Their Lordships affirmed the judgment below as regards the cargo, but varied it, so far as related to the Policy on disbursements, holding that as the ship, when she was reduced to a wreck, was incapable of earning any freight, there was such a total loss of the disbursements, to be paid out of the freight, as to entitle the assured to recover on that Policy. CONTRACT FOR.

-What amounts to.

The suit was for breach of an alleged contract to "issue Policies of insurance covering war risks on goods" shipped or to be shipped by the plaintlffs "at the rate prevailing at the time of the plaintiff firm's declaration of the steamer, by which goods, as aforesaid, were to be shipped. was founded on (a) a written quotation by the defendants of their lowest rate on jute per S. S. Constantinos XII at 1 per cent, and war risk at 5 per cent. less 10 per cent; (b) an acceptance of this rate by the plaintiffs; and (c) an arrangement that the plaintiffs should supply the defendant company with a statement of the approximate amount to be covered. The alleged contract arose on an acceptance by word of mouth of a letter quoting a rate of premium and on a declaration by word of mouth, not of the name of the steamer, by which the goods were to be shipped, but of the expected value of the plaintiffs' goods to be loaded on board of her.

Held, that the contract alleged by the plaintiffs was a contract for sea insurance and nothing else (129). (Lord Summer.) SURAJMULL NAGOREMULL P. THE TRITON (1924) 52 I. A. 126 = INSURANCE CO., LTD.

-Refusal to issue-Specific Performance.

The appeal arose out of a suit brought by the appellant for the specific performance of a contract made by the respondent company to deliver a policy of insurance not exceeding Rs. 15,000 on rice and disbursements for and on the Copeland Isle on a Voyage from Rangoon to Bombay.

The plaint alleged that on 9.3.1885, the appellant entered into an agreement at Rangoon with one M, for a charter of the latter's vessel, Copeland Isle, from Rangoon to Bombay, and that M guaranteed the vessel a good insurance risk and undertook to obtain insurance for such goods as the appellant should ship by her; that the appellant, intending to ship 100 bags of rice on board of her. required M, to obtain insurance for the sum of Rs. 15,000 upon the rice and the disbursements which the appellant was to make on account of the vessel; that M applied to the agents of the respondents at Rangoon to accept an

Rs. 5000, and inclosed the premium ; that the respondents on 1-4-1885 replied by letter regretting that as they did not grant the appellant an "open cover" they could not issue a policy, and returning the premium; and that the respondents persistently refused to issue the policy, and that the Copeland Isle whilst proceeding on her voyage to Bombay was totally lost.

Upon the evidence in the suit their Lordships came to the conclusion that the open cover was given to M, in order that he might give it to the charterer of the vessel, and that it was a proposal to insure, and that although addressed to M, it could not have been intended for his acceptance, as it was known that he was not going to ship the rice.

Held, that when M handed the open cover to the appellant it was a subsisting proposal capable of being accepted by him, and that when the appellant applied to the respondents for policies to the amount mentioned in the cover, there was an acceptance of the proposal so as to make a binding contract with the appellant to insure and issue a policy in terms of the open cover (70).

The acceptance by the appellant was made whilst the offer to insure was subsisting, and was sufficient to complete the contract (70).

Scarcorthiness of Intermediate ports-Seaworthiness at-Warranty of-Time Policy-Voyage Policy-Distinction.

If, as was contended, in a time policy there is a warranty of seaworthiness, at the time the vessel started on her original voyage, this vessel is found by the Court below to have been seaworthy at such a time. Then comes the question, assuming she was seaworthy when she started on her voyage,-is there a further warranty that she shall be seaworthy at every intermediate port she touches at, pending the progress or continuance of her voyage, which is to last for a specified tinfe? Now, if it had been a voyage policy, there is no question, although there had been a warranty of seaworthiness when she started on her voyage, there would be no warranty that she should be seaworthy at an intermediate port at which she touched, which port she is endeavouring to make intermediate; and if it were to be held that there was a warranty in a time policy that the ship shall be seaworthy at her departure and at every intermediate port during the currency of the time policy, it would be holding that there is a warranty to a greater extent in a time policy than there would be in a voyage policy (370-1).

Held, therefore, that, assuming there was in a time policy a warranty of se-worthiness, it was satisfied at the time the voyage commenced, and that there was no warranty at any intermediate port (371). The general rule is that a policy of indemnity, being a written instrument, the terms of that instrument must be construed subject to certain conditions, one of which is, that in a voyage policy, custom and decision have annexed to that contract a warranty of seaworthiness, and that there is no custom and no decision which warrants the Court in saying, that in a time policy any such warranty attaches (371). The salvors were asked to put their offer into writing which was done but after some interval it was withdrawn.

Held that, by reason of those communications between the underwriters and a third party, there had not been a binding acceptance of the abandonment which had been tendered by the assured, in spite of their formal refusal of it.

The underwriters in this tentative negotiation did not act as owners of the tug or exercise dominion over it, and they did not purport to sell and convey or to make a title for that purpose. An agreement to sell, had it been concluded, would only have been an executory contract, which they would be able to perform if and when they chose to accept the abandonment, but in itself it could not be an act of As a matter of fact, this every day proceeding was nothing more than a precaution, equally available in ownership. connexion with proving a defence in case they should resist the claim or with preparing to make the best of the loss if they should give up the contest and elect to pay. -Agreement to pay—Course of dealings between parties showing—Decree on foot of—Right to—Plaint setting up specific case of agreement to pay compound interest with annual rests inconsistent with agreement disclosed by the accounts—Effect.

The plaintiffs were members of a joint Hindu family, and they carried on a money-lending business. The defendant began to borrow money from the plaintiffs on the 20th of Pous 1310 Fusli (i.e., January 1903), when a sum of Rs 300 was advanced and after the expiration of 15 months eleven days' interest was debited to the account. Further sums were advanced from time to time, and the accounts were adjusted periodically, the last adjustment having taken place on the 25th Jeth 1324, corresponding to May, 1917, so that the account between the porties was running for about 14 years. Simple interest was charged upon each advance from the date of such advance until the date when the principal sum and interest were carried into a separate column of the account. The periods during which the interest was charged varied. The account was then adjusted and Interest calculated on the total amount found due, so that compound interest was charged. During the time the accounts were running they were submitted to the defendant and on nine occasions he signed the accounts, the first occasion being 10th Majh 1312 and the last occasion being 25th Jeth 1324 Fusli. The accounts submitted by the plaintiffs to the defendant and signed by him as above mentioned showed the compound interest, the dates at which the adjustments respectively were made, and the period during which and the rate at which the compound interest was charged. Nevertheless, in a suit by the plaintiffs to recover the balance due to them by the defendant, the High Court held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover the compound interest charged in the accounts. They did so on the ground that the plaintiffs had, in their plaint in the suit, set up a specific case of an agreement that interest should be charged with annual rests, that annual rests had not been made in the accounts, and that the specific case set up had not been proved. The accounts did not, in fact, show annual rests.

Held that the High Court adopted too narrow a view of the plaintiff's case, that the pleadings alleged an agreement by the defendant to pay the compound interest charged in the accounts which were submitted to and accepted by him, and that such agreement was proved.

It is true that it was alleged in paragraph 16 of the plaint that the plaintiff's practice was to charge interest with annual rests, but there is also a specific allegation that the defendant was informed of the claim to interest and compound interest and be accepted the claim. In view of these allegations in the plaint their Lordships are of opinion that the plaintiffs are entitled to rely upon the course of dealing between the parties as showing an agreement by the defendant to pay the compound interest which was in fact charged by the plaintiffs in the accounts submitted to him.  Oppressive nature of, or of compound interest with rests—Test—Rate of interest—Reasonableness of—England and India—Distinction.

The question of compound interest cannot be regarded as entirely separable from the rate of interest. Compound interest at a moderate rate may not necessarily be oppressive and similarly compound interest with infrequent rests may or may not be oppressive, while compound interest cou-pled with a high rate of interest and with frequent rests might be in excess of any authority which the Karta (of a joint Hindu family) could have. The whole conditions and terms of the lending have to be regarded together. There is no rule, which their Lordships can discover, which binds them, when the terms of a loan are challenged, to lean to their reduction, or to presume that simple interest must always be judicially preferable to compound interest, or that rates, because they seem high here, must be unreasonable in India. Compound interest is common and may often be necessary and proper in India under the circumstances of that country. The matter is not one upon which, one way or the other, their Lordships' Board has ever decided that there is a presumption one way. (Viscount Sumner.) SUNDER MULL P. SATYA KINKAR SAHANA.

-Reduction of rate by-Benefit of-Right to, of stranger to decree claiming relief inconsistent with it.

The Court's power to regulate interest is given by S. 10 of Act XXIII of 1861, which answers to S. 209 of the present Code of Civil Procedure (1882). That power is given when a plaintiff sues for money due to him, and it is a discretionary power to give such rate as the court may think proper by decree. The decree can only operate between the parties to the suit, and those who claim under them. The plaintiff getting the security of a decree has his interest reduced in the generality of cases. That rate cannot, however, be availed of by persons who were not parties to the decree and who claim relief inconsistent with it.

Where, therefore, a puisne mortgagee, who had not been impleaded in a suit upon the prior mortgage, which resulted in a deceee and in the execution purchase of the mortgaged property by the prior mortgagee, sued the latter for redemp-tion of the prior mortgage, held that the plaintiff could not avail himself of the reduced rate of interest allowed by the decree on the prior mortgage but was liable for the rate of interest fixed by the prior mortgage (213.4). ## Equitable claim to.

Condition of.

In order to invoke a rule of equity entitling a party to interest, it is necessary in the first instance to establish the existence of a state of circumstances which attacts the equitable jurisdiction, as for example, the non-performance of a contract of which equity can give specific performance, (I ord Tomlin.) -Executed contract-Suit on covenants and not on contract-Claim in case of.

When once such a contract has been executed, then, apart from cases where rescission on the ground of fraud is sought, there remains nothing to attract the equitable jurisdiction and the parties are left to their remedies at law.

Where a party cannot, and does not, sue upon the contract, because it is fully executed, and he sues only upon the covenants, those covenants must be construed according to the ordinary rules of construction, and if they do not, so construed, give the plaintiff interest, he cannot claim interest unless it is given to him at common law or under statute. There is no place in the matter for the exercise of equitable jurisdiction and, therefore, no rule of equity in regard to interest can have any application. (Lord Tomlin.) ## Future interest.

Award of-Discretion as to-Implication of exercise of, though point not expressly dealt with.

In a suit for redemption, the Judge of first instance did not give to the mortgagee interest from the date of suit. There was no reference in his judgment to the point. On appeal from his decree the mortgagee contended that the omission to give interest from the date of suit was due not to the exercise of any discretion vested in the trial Judge but to oversight. But the High Court refused to accept that contention and treated the trial Judge as having declined to award any interest for the period in question and held that it was a matter left to his discretion, and that under the circumstances of the case that discretion had not been unreasonably exercised. No application was made to the trial Judge to repair the alleged omission before the order was perfected, or at all. On further appeal by the mortgagee, held by their Lordships that, in the circumstances of the case, the order made by the trial Judge must be taken to represent in all respects his decision on the matter in point and that the discretion was not unreason ably exercised. In a case in which the Sub-judge had allowed interest up to the date of suit, it was contended that his order should have included a sum in respect of interest up to date of judgment and should as a judgment have been expressed to carry interest at the rate of 6 per cent, per annum. Their Lordships thought it more than likely that both items were excluded from the learned Judge's order by an oversight, and that, if the point had been present to his mind, he would in both the matters have adopted the general rule and allowed interest until payment.

Nevertheless their Lordships were not, merely on conjecture, prepared to direct any variation of the decree in respect of interest up to date of payment, being of opinion that such interest was not as of course, (Lord Blancsburgh.) DEWAN CHAND KIRPA RAM & CO. F. WELD & CO.

INTEREST ACT XXXII OF 1839

Applicability.

Agreement between parties regulating amount of interest.

By an agreement between Principal and Agents, 10 percent, was to be allowed as commission. The Sudder Court, under Act No. XXXII of 1839 allowed 12 per-ent, perannum from the date of the suit, on the amount found due to the Agents; such rate of interest disallowed on appeal, as that Act does not apply to an agreement between parties regulating the amount of interest. - Debts contingent in amount and time of becoming

The certainty as to the amount and time of payment required by the Interest Act XXXII of 1839 must exist at the time when the promise is made. The Act does not, accordingly, in this part affect debts contingent in amount, and time of becoming due (280). (Sir John Coloridge.) JUGGOMOHUN GHOSE P. MANIKCHUND.

Promise contingent on events, which may never happen, to pay inm capable of ascertainment only, and if where these shall happen, and the time for the happening of which

Where the plaintiff stated that, in consideration that he had paid to the defendants the sum of Rs. 500, they had undertaken that if the average price per chest of Patna opium at the next ensuing public scale rose above Rs. 1 300, they would pay him such excess or difference within a reasonable time after the said sale, held that the contract was not within the scope of Act XXXII of 1839 (280).

There is no promise absolutely to pay any sum, certain or uncertain, nor any time limited for the payment, but only a promise contingent on events which may never happen, to pay a sum capable of ascertainment only, and if when these shall happen, and the time for the happening of which, if they ever do happen, may be indefinitely postponed. There seems to be an insuperable difficulty in bringing such a state of facts within any but the most forced construction of the words of the Act, which supposes a party to have been sued for breach of a contract for the payment, by virtue of a written instrument, of a sum certain at a certain time (280-1). -Allowance or refusal of-Discretion as to-P. C's interfernce with-Conditions.

The next question is, whether the discretion of the court in allowing or refusing to allow interest, in cases within the Interest Act XXXII of 1839, is liable to review or appeal.

We should, undoubtedly, he slow to interfere in any case before us in respect of any matter specifically within the power of the jury, as for example, the amount of damages; but dealing as we have to deal, with questions of fact as well as of law, we are not prepared to say that, in a case either of allowance or refusal, in which we were clear that the court below, acting either through prejudice or misunderstanding, had committed injustice, we should not feel bound to recommend to Her Majesty that an opportunity should be afforded of reconsidering the matter in a new trial (281-2). -Award of -Principle of -Compensation to creditor -Penalty to debtor.

The Interest Act XXXII of 1839, by the qualifications which it imposes of certainty in time and amount, by requiring that this certainty, and the obligation itself to pay the principal, should be created by a written instrument, by making the interest run from the time at which the principal is payable, and, finally, by giving the jury a discretion as to the allowance of interest, even where all these circumstances concur, seems to have been framed, not simply on the principle of compensation to the creditor, but also on that of penalty to the debtor for not paying punctually at a time when he must have known the debt or sum, specific in amount, was to be paid. But for this consideration there was no reason why all the debts, without distinction, should not have been made to bear interest from the time when payable; no previous uncertainty of amount, or of time of payment, would have been material, nor should any distinction have been made between obligations by writing and by word of mouth; nor ought the jury to have had any discretion; for in all cases the need of compensation to the creditor may be assumed to have been the same. But, if the conduct of the debtor be taken into account, then the uncertainty of the amount, and the contingency as to the time of payment, and that there is no writing, are all more or less material; obviously the most honest and punctual debtor may be unprepared to pay an uncertain amount, which may not be due for months, or years, or only on the happening of a contingency, the falling in of which he may not know of. On this principle, too, the discretion given to the jury to consider all the circumstances of each particular case becomes perfectly reasonable. It is quite consistent with this view that where the debt is payable "otherwise" than at a certain time, interest is not to be allowed except from and after the time of a written demand of payment. ## S. 1.—Sum certain payable at time certain.

Meaning of .

What is meant by a sum certain, and a time certain in the Interest Act XXXII of 1839? With respect both to amount and time of payment, it was argued that the maxim "id certum est quod certum reddi potest" must be applied ; and, in a reasonable sense, this is true. In the simplest case we may be obliged to have recourse to calculation for the actual amount, or to the calendar for the precise day of payment. A promise to pay on the last Saturday of the year, at the rate of 15 th. a week for twelve months, would certainly be a promise to pay a sum certain at a time certain. It was argued also that in repect of both time and amount it was a question of degree; this is also true (278-9). (Sir JUGGOMOHUN GHOSE P. MANICK John Coleridge.) (1859) 7 M.I.A. 263=4 W.B. P.C. 8-CHUND. 1 Suth. 357 = 1 Sar. 681.

-A sum certain is not payable by the written instrument at a time certain, within the meaning of S. I of the Interest Act XXXII of 1839, if its payment is contingent upon events which may or may not happen.

So held on a construction of S. 24 (1) of the New Brunswick Judicature Act 1909 (identical in terms with S. 28 of Lord Tenterden's Act, 3 & 4 Will. iv, C. 42 and S. 1 of the MAINE AND NEW Indian Statute.) (Lord Tomlin.) BRUNSWICK ELECTRICAL POWER CO, LID. P. HART.

INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT.

"Belligerents" within meaning of-Who are.

The Sixth article of the Sixth Convention of 1907 declares that " the provisions of the present Convention do not apply except between contracting Powers, and then only if all the belligerents are parties to the Convention.

The question was whether the "belligerents" who were to be taken account of for the purposes of the article, were the belligerents merely who detained or suffered detention, or whether they were all the Powers who were simultaneously engaged in war, whether acting in alliance or in direct conflict with one another or not.

Their Lordships, while inclining to the former view, considered it unnecessary to decide the question (265).

Mutuality is of the essence of the Convention. Is that mutuality complete if the detaining Sovereign and the Sovereign of the ships detained ratify and abide by the Convention, or is it imperfect, so as to prevent the application of the Convention, unless and until other Powers in no way concerned in the ships or their fortunes, but merely connected with one or both of those Sovereigns in the gene ral war, have likewise ratifled and likewise abided by the Convention, whether or no they have ships or harbours, and whether or no they make or suffer captures or are ever directly affected by maritime war at all? It is very hard to credit that the operation of an agreement, so earnestly directed to the attainment of the highest practical ends in war, should have been deliberately made to depend on the accidents or the procrastinations of diplomatic procedure in time of peace, even when no real relation existed between the condition and the consequence, between the ratification of all the parties and the detention of the ships of one of them (264-5.) (1922) 31 M. L. T. 260 P C.

-Consensus ad idem-Necessity-Mode of finding

Although no doubt comenns of idem is fundamentally necessary to an international agreement, as it would be to a private offer and acceptance under Municipal Law, it does not follow that in the intercourse of Sovereign States every interchange of messages, some formal and some informal, should be deemed to result in a new and binding agreement as soon as the parties have reached the stage of affirming identical propositions (262-3). (Lord Sumner.) BLONDE, ETC., IN THE MATTER OF THE STEAMSHIPS.

-Construction of -Principles.

In constraing such an international agreement as that now in question, it is profitable to bear in mind from the outset sundry considerations, which are not the less important for being doubtless somewhat obvious. It results from deliberations among the representatives of many Powers, in which none can expect without some concession to insist upon his country's interests, its language or its law. It is expressed in what is by tradition the common language of international intercourse, but it would be unreasonable in the circumstances to expect of it either nicety of scholarship or exactitude of literary idiom. Neither the municipal law nor the technical terms of the negotiating countries can be expected to find a place in its provisions. Where interests conflict, much must be allowed to the effects of compromise; where the principles, by which future action is to be guided, are laid down broadly, leaving to the Powers concerned the actual measures to be taken in execution of those principles, it is unreasonable to expect a greater precision than the circumstances admit of, or to reject as incomplete provisions, which are expressed without much detail and sometimes only in outline. On the other hand, it is specially necessary to discover and to give effect to all the beneficent intentions, which such instruments embody and which their general tenor indicates. It is impossible to suppose, whatever the imperfections of their phrasing, that the framers of such instruments should have intended any power to escape its obligations by a quibbling interpretation, by a merely pedantic adherence to particular words, or by emphasising the absence of express words, where the sense to be implied from the purport of the convention is reasonably plain (265-6), (Lord Sumner.) BLONDE, ETC., IN THE MATTER OF THE STEAMSHIPS.

- Exterritoriality in - Meaning of.

Art. 16 of the Zanzibar Treaty of 1886 provided that "subjects of her Britannic Majesty shall, as regards their person and property, enjoy within the dominions of His Highness the Sultan of Zanzibar the rights of exterritori-

On a question arising as to the meaning of the word "exterritoriality," held that, having regard to the latter part of Art. 16 and to the succeeding Articles which showed that the treaty actually specified all the usual benefits accorded by Mahomedan powers to a British subject, it could not be held that the moment a plot of fand was purchased by an Englishman it was stamped with the same character and was attended by the same incidents that would belong to it if it were actually transferred to England and surrounded by other English land, and that his neighbours, who might or might not be British subjects, must have their rights and liabilities governed by its fictitious and not by its actual situation.

It is reasonable to conclude that the things specified shew the nature of the immunicies desired by and accorded to the British subject—complete personal protection, assurance of satisfactory judicial tribunals, and such enjoyment of his property for himself and for those who claim under him as British law would afford him for British property (131.2). - Intention of parties to-Ascertainment of-Reference to what they have said-Permissibility.

The principle of ascertaining the intention of the parties to an agreement by giving due consideration to what they have said is no doubt valid in international matters (270). (Lord Sumner.) BLONDE, ETC., IN THE MATTER OF THE STEAMSHIPS. (1922) 31 M. L. T. 250 P. C.

By a deed of 1858 the then bigs of O-th.

By a deed of 1838 the then king of Oudh provided pensions for various members of his family, including M. J. and her son. His intention, as manifested in that deed, was that, in the event of the death of any of the pensioners leaving issue, his or her heirs, according to the Mahomedan law of inheritance, should receive payment of the pension in the proportions regulated by such law of inheritance.

In the latter part of the year 1841, the said King subscribed the sum of 12 lacs of rupees to the 5 per cent. Government loan which was then open. The money was paid into the Treasury of the Political Resident at Lucknow, and brought to the credit of the Government of India.

On 4-1-1842 the King wrote a letter to the Governor-General, in which, after referring to the deed of 1838 and stating that the allowance allowed to M. J. therein was insufficient, he expressed his desire that an additional pension should be paid "to her and to her issue, generation after generation, and womb after womb." The Governor-General assented to his request, and from that time until the time of the death of M. J. on 9-7-1881, the stipend was paid to her in accordance with terms of the arrangement between the Government of India and the King.

Held, on the construction of the King's letter of 1842, that it was his intention to provide for an additional pension for Malka Jehan of the same nature as that which he had provided for her in the year 1838, and that after her death, provided she should leave issue, it should be paid to such of her issue as should be her heirs according to the rules of Mahemedan law of inheritance (181).

There is nothing in the King's letter of 1842 to lead to the inference that he intended by the increase of the pension of Malka Jehan to benefit any other persons than those who were to be benefited upon her death by the pension of 1838 (181-2). The tanks are ancient, and formed part of what may be termed a national system of irrigation, recognised by Hindu and Mahomedan Law, by regulations of the East India Co., and by experience older than history, as essential to the welfare, and, indeed, to the existence of a large portion of the population of India. The public duty of maintaining existing tanks, and of constructing new ones in many places, was originally undertaken by the Government of India, and upon the settlement of the country has, in many instances, devolved on Zemindars. The Zemindars have no power to do away with these tanks, in the maintenance of which large numbers of people are interested, but are charged under Indian law, by reason of their tenure, with the duty of preserving and repairing them (385). Hale, De Jure Maris, describes how " the king bath a title to maritima incrementa or increase of land by the sea; and this is of three kinds, tre:-1. Increase per projectionem vel alluvionem. 2. Increase per relictionem vel desertionem 3 Per insulae productionem." The third category is thus dealt with by Hale: "3. The third sort of maritime increase are islands arising de novo in the king's seas, or the king's arms thereof. These upon the same account and reason prima facie and of common right belong to the king; for they are part of that soil of the sea, that belonged before in point of propriety to the king; for when islands de noto arise, it is either by the recess or sinking of the water, or else by the exaggeration of Sand and Slubb, which in process of time grow firm land environed with water" (198-9). The suit lands were islands which had been formed in the bed of the sea near the mouth or delta of the river Godavari, which was a tidal and navigable river. #### ESTATE CONVEYED UNDER.

-Grant to a person and after him to his heir for generation after generation.

All the villages in suit were at one time the estate of K. we father of J. Through extravagance or misfortune K fe // into poverty and he parted with the villages; whether in fac - r only in appearance was matter of dispute. / became a o successful man of business, and he also rendered active and valuable services to the Government at the time of the Sep, y Mutiny. Thus he became able to repossess himself of he estate which K had enjoyed, and the Government acknowledged his services by a grant dated April

The Sanad of April, 1861, recited the services of J, and that they had been recognised by the bestowal of the ti tle of Rajah " and were worthy of a further recognition by the grant of a "jagir." It then continued: "Be it known that the passession and jama (revenue) of the five villages granted tor generation after generation, shall for ever be given up and remitted, and that the revenue of the seven villages granted for lifetime shall remain under remission till his life-time, to wit, their Zemindars who now pay the revenue to British Government shall pay it to him, and after him they shall ever pay 10 p.c. as malikana allowance to his heir after the deduction of Government revenue, for generation after generation.

Held that the obvious meaning of the expression "his heir for generation after generation " was that the malikana was to form part of f's heritable property; and that whereas he took the whole income for his life only, he was to take the 10 p.c. malikana in absolute ownership (66-7).

Mr. Ross does not contend that the words " generation after generation " confer any interest less than absolute ownership, nor does he contend that the jama of the five villages did not pass to J in absolute ownership. His contention is, that as regards the seven villages there are two distinct gifts-one to I for his life, and the other after his death; and that at his death the malikana is given in absolute ownership to the person who may then happen to be his heir. That would attribute to the Government the strange intention of acknowledging the personal merits of J by conferring a benefit on some unknown heir for whom he might or might not have a regard. The construction also appears to be so strained as it is improbable (66). (Lord Hobbouse.) RAO BALWANT SINGH v. RANI KISHORI. (1898) 25 I. A. 54=20 A. 267 (283)=2 C. W. N. 278=

Indefinite terms-Grant in-Grant to a man and his heirs-Distinction.

There is no principle or authority which gives any warrant for the contention that a grant of a jagir to a man and his heirs only operates as giving a succession of life interests to the grantee and his heirs for the time being. It is true that where a jagir is granted in indefinite terms, it is taken to be for the life only of the jagirdar. But where there is a grant to a man and his heirs, and nothing to control the ordinary meaning of the words, the grantee takes an absolute interest. The principle that jagirs are to be considered life tenures only, "unless otherwise expressed in the grant," is expressly laid down in the Bengal Regulations. See Reg. XXXVII of 1793, S. 15. It is the law also in Bombay and other parts of India (25-6). (Lord Hobboust.) DOSI BAI v. ISHWARDAS JAGJIWANDAS.

Pension-Jagir accompanying-Grant by Government of-Intention that two should be subject to same conditions.

A sunnud granted by the Governor of Bombay to N, who was the Commander-in-chief of the forces of the Nawab, provided as follows:-"Under these circumstances it has appeared incumbent and proper, in the view of the chief authority (Hoozoor), that some suitable provision should be made as a subsidy for the expenses of the above-named N and his descendants; that is to say, by reason of close relationship, and being descended from the same ancestors as those of the Nawabs of the maritime city of Surat. Therefore, this has been settled by the instrumentality of the Governor....as follows: That N, with his children or descendants, after the deduction of the income of the jaghire according to the particulars given at the foot hereof, that is now in the possession of the above-mentioned N, shall receive from the valiant English Company's Government the sum of Rs. 24,000 per annum by four equal instalments, .... Hereafter should it be necessary for the Government to resume the above-mentioned jagir, given on account of maintenance or otherwise, the amount of the income thereof shall be received by the above-mentioned N, and his children or descendants, from the Treasury of the valiant English company." There was a further provision that "on account of the merit and laudable qualities of N, he is to receive during his lifetime Rs. 6,000 per annum by four equal instalments;" and then were appended the particulars of the jagir, consisting of 9 mehals, the revenue from which altogether amounted to Rs. 6,264-40.

Held, having regard to the peculiar character of the grant from the Government, that the Court below was right in treating it as conferring upon such of the descendants of N who would be entitled under it, an estate for life, and for life only (61).

The present is not the case of the State merely granting a jagir and declaring that that grant shall be hereditary, but it is a grant of a jagir accompanied with the grant of a pension under circumstances which indicate that the intention was that the grant of the jagir and the grant of the pension should be subject to the same conditions (62). --- Words "Putra-pontradi"-Effect of.

The terms which will make the grant of a jaghir a grant of an estate of inheritance must, if they are to be considered alone, be terms which are not ambiguous, and must clearly show whether it was intended by the grantor that the right of inheritance should be general or should be confined to a particular class of heirs. The term "putra-poutradi" in a jaghir grant, standing by itself, and without any evidence to show whether in the locality of the jagir collaterals or females succeeded to jagirs, is ambiguous. .-- Words "Son, grandson, etc., from generation to generation"-Effect.

It has been observed by many writers of authority on the subject that the expressions "his son, grandson, etc., from generation to generation," in sunnuds granting a jagir or saranjam, do not, as might be supposed, impart a fixed hereditary tenure (59-60). #### INCIDENTS OF.

Grants in jagir of the ordinary character are personal and not hereditary, and are resumable at pleasure. Being personal and temporary, they are necessarily impartible. This accurately distinguishes between partibility as such, and any consequence, which may be supposed to flow from such a fact. The impartibility of jagir-lands is in truth entirely separated from the idea of succession by the fact that the impartible lands were held together as a unit in the hands of one man who was rendering personal service to the Government of the day. It may be that upon his death a fresh grant, again to one man, and again in tesurn for personal service, was made, and it may also be that the one man selected was in the ordinary case the eldest son; but these matters of practice were not consequences of law. and the impartibility and unity which attached to personal service were not related to, but, on the contrary, were distinct from, the idea of succession by force of law to the impartible lands. Once grant that the lands were jugir and impartible as such, a custom of descent thereof by primogeniture was not a subject for proof, because such a custom would be radically inconsistent with the personal and nontransmissive character of a grant in jagir Lands held in jagir cannot, therefore, he held to be subject to the rule of primogeniture (212-3). The question was whether Pargana Bundh in Chota Nagpur was, as contended by the Maharaja of Chota Nagpur, a mere jagir or tenure resumable on failure of the direct male line, or, as alleged by the plaintiff, a mortgagee from the holder, an independent estate held by the ancestors of the plaintiffs' mortgagor and was incorporated in the zemindari of the Maharajah of Chota Nagpur as a shikmi or dependent taluk, with its revenue payable through the Maharajah.

Held, that in such a suit the initial onus was on the plaintiff to prove the grant alleged, viz., a grant to P.

Without the grant alleged the plaint would have shown no cause of action. It is necessary to ascertain to whom the grant was made, in order to determine the subsequent question to be tried, namely, whose descendants have or have not failed.

Quaere, whether on proof by the plaintiff of the grant alleged, the burden would be shifted upon the defendants to prove that the descendants of P, still lived, or whether the Suit by plaintiff to recover possession of certain lands upon the ground that these lands were granted by an ancestor of his to one P, to be held in jagir tenure, that is, to P, and his lineal descendants, that P's lineal descendants had failed, and therefore that plaintiff was entitled to resume possession. Admittedly the tenure was created in the proper and usual manner, namely, by a pottah and kabuliat.

Held that, in such a case, the proper way for the plaintiff to prove the grant alleged by him, viz., a grant to P, was to produce the original kabuliat, or to give secondary evidence of it, after laying the foundation for the admission of such secondary evidence (784).

Semble the absence of such proof might be supplied by proof that P was in fact the first jugirdar in possession of the jagir, and that it had descended from him through father and son to the last owner (784). MAHARAJAH JUG-GERNATH SAHEE P. MUSST, AHLAD KOWUR.

INHERITANCE—CUSTOM OF—APPLICABILITY OF.

Plea of - P.C. appeal - Maintainability for hest tim: in-Mithakshara Law-Applicability of Admission in Courts below of.

The question was as to the succession to the property of a Jain. The contest was between the plaintiffs, the agnatic relations of the deceased, and the defendant, the husband of the deceased's daughter, who survived him. The question for decision was whether the daughter of the deceased took an absolute estate or only an estate for 15fe in the deceased's estate. The plaintiffs alleged that the law governing the succession to the estate of the deceased was the Mithakshara Law. The defendant in the Courts below admitted that the Mithakshara Law applied to the case, but contended that, according to it, his wife took an absolute estate in her father's property. He never alleged that that law was modified by the custom of the Jains. In his appeal to the P. C. the defendant contended for the first time that the right of succession must be determined by the customs of the Jains, that those customs had not been ascertained, and that the suit ought to be remanded for the purpose of ascertaining them.

Held that the defendant could not, under the circumstances of the case, impeach the judgment below on the ground urged (30). (Sir Montague E. Smith.) CHOTAY LALL v. CHUNNOO LALL. 4 C. 744 (751-2) = 3 C.L.R. 465 = 3 Sar. 880 = 3 Suth. 572.

PRESUMPTION-ONUS OF PROOF

The Jains might be governed, as to some matters, by special laws and usages, and where these are satisfactorily proved, effect ought to be given to them (107-8).

It would certainly have been remarkable if it had appeared that, in India, where, under the system of laws administered by the British Government, a large toleration is, as a rule, allowed to usages and customs differing from the ordinary law, whether Hindu or Mahomedan, the Courts had denied to the large and wealthy communities existing among the Jains, the privilege of being governed by their own peculiar laws and customs, when those laws and customs were, by sufficient evidence, capable of being ascertained and defined, and were not open to objection on grounds of public policy or otherwise (108).

Undoubtedly a custom, being opposed to the spirit of the Hindu law, would require strong evidence for its support (109). ### HISTORY AND RELIGIOUS TEXETS OF.

The parties are Sarangee-Agarwallas, one of the numerous sub-divisions of the sect of the Jains. What little is known of the history of that sect is to be found collected in the case reported in 10 Bons. H. C. R. 241. For upwards of eleven and twelve-centuries they have secoded from the creed of the Vedas, and their religious teners have more affinity with the proyepts of the Buildhists than with those of the Brahmins. They recognise the caste system of the Brahminical Hindus, and in such ceremonies as they retain. they generally avail themselves of the assistance of a Brahmin.

They differ particularly from the Brahminical Hindus in their conduct towards the dead, omitting all obsequies after the corpse is burnt or baried. They also regard the birth of a son as having no effect on the future state of his progenitor, and, consequently, adoption is merely a temporal arrangement and has no spiritual object. ## Temple of Antanksha Parasnath at Shirpur.

-Management of-Right of-Digambari and Suxtambari seets-Rights of - Scheme of management of 1905 -Effect of.

The appellants represented the Digambari division of the Jains, and the respondents the Swetambari division. The dispute between them related to the management of the Jain Temple of Antanksha Parasnath at Shirpur. The respondents instituted the suit out of which the appeal arose. By their plaint they asserted that the property in and right of management of the entire temple was and always had been exclusively in the Swetambaries. They prayed, inter alia, for a declaration of their absolute and uncontrolled right of management of the temple, and for an injunction restraining the defendants-appellants from interfering with plaintiffs' rights. The appellants by their written statement completely repudiated the claims of the respondents and asserted their own rights over the temple and the idol which were as extensive and as absolute as those put forward by the respondents.

The evidence adduced at the trial, however, disclosed that, to meet a common enemy who had usurped the management, valid, although the defendant was not placed on the lap of and had maltreated and plundered the pilgrims, the two sects united with the result that, in May 1901, a joint com mittee of equal numbers of Swetambaris and Digambaris was formed to undertake the management of all affurs, that at a general meeting of the Jains in 1905, at which, the Joint Committee still being in management, there was formed a scheme whereby the worship of the idol was to be performed by both sects in turns according to a regular time-table and that from that date up to 1908, when the disputes between the two sects arose the two sects managed the temple through their Committee, and worship was carried on by each sect in accordance with its ceremonies and observances as prescribed by the time-table propounded in 1905.

The trial Judge, being of opinion that the above-mentioned arrangements set at rest all disputes as to worship and as to management of the temple held that the respondents were estopped from denying the right of the appel-lants to the joint management of the temple and to the worship of the idol in their own way as both of those matters were left in the year 1905. In so holding, the trial Judge purported to give effect to a plea of estoppel set up by the appellants in their written statement. The appellate court overruled him, being of opinion that the plea of estoppel set up by the appellants in their written statement had no reference to that position.

Held, that the appellate Court was right in thinking that the plea of estoppel set up by the appellants in their written statement had no reference to any claims founded on the arrangements of 1905.

Each of the two sects asserted an exclusive property in the temple and idol, with a right of management entirely uncontrolled. Joint control imposed by the one sect upon the other was a suggestion foreign to the cases of both. It was the common position as pleaded that the arrangements of 1905 in no way infringed upon the absolute and exclusive rights claimed by each of them. Further the plea of estoppel contained in the written statement is perfectly general in its terms, and the appellants, when asked, refused to give any particulars of its meaning. In the absence of such particulars it seems to their Lordships impossible for the appellants to contend with success that it was thereby intended to set up against the respondents claim to exclusive management an estoppel which would at once be fatal to the same claim then being substantively put forward by themselves. Again, the written statement does not contain an alternative plea based upon the agreement of 1905; no issue with regard to the agreement was or could have been directed; and the evidence was not pointed to any such issue. -Eredeuce.

The question was whether the sons of a daughter, who lived together as a joint Hindu family, took, on their mother's death, the estate of their maternal grandfather jointly with benefit of survivorship. The District Judge. while of opinion that in law they did not acquire the property as joint owners, held that they had so dealt with it as to shew that it was joint property.

There was nothing in the evidence which supported the view that the grandsons held the property in common rather than jointly; there was no separate dealing with any share. It was not suggested that if they succeeded jointly they ever ceased to hold it in the same way. The property was treated and dealt with as a whole, and so far joint ownership rather than ownership in common was the more probable. After their mother's death, and whilst their father was living, the elder of the two grandsons manage I the whole property and acted as his brother's guardian during his minority, which would hardly have been the case if the brothers had their separate interest in undivided shares,

Held, that the evidence did not so unmistakeably negative ownership in common as distinguished from joint ownership as to render it safe to decide the case on that ground alone. (Lerd Lindley.) RAJA CHELIKANI VEN KAYAMMA GARU :: RAJA CHELIKANI VENKATARAMA-(1902) 29 I. A. 156 (166-7)= NAYAMMA.

Each of the purchasers was in the deed described as a "merchant." The purchase money was raised by a mortgage of the purchased share and of certain other shares in the original testator's estate.

With regard to the ways in which a joint tenancy may, under the English Law, be severed, Wood, V. C. observed, in Williams v. Hensman, as follows:—

A joint tenancy may be severed in three ways: In the first place, an act of any one of the persons interested operating upon his own share may create a severance as to that share... Secondly, a joint tenancy may be severed by mutual agreement. And in the third place there may be a severance by any course of dealing sufficient to intimate that the interests of all were mutually treated as constituting a tenancy-in-common. When the severance depends on an inference of this kind without any express act of severance, it will not suffice to rely on an intention with respect to the particular share, declared only behind the backs of the other parties interested. You must find, in this class of cases, a course of dealing by which the shares of all the parties to the contest have been affected.

If there be two or more tenants in common, and one A be in actual occupation of part of the estate, and is engaged in cultivating that part in a proper course of cultivation as if it were his separate property, and another tenant in common B attempts to come upon the said part for the purpose of carrying on operations there inconsistent with the course of cultivation in which A is engaged, and the profitable use by him of the said part, and A resists and prevents such entry, not in denial of B's title, but simply with the object of protecting himself in the profitable enjoyment of the land, such conduct on the part of A would not entitle B to a decree for joint possession, or to one for an injunction. The proper remedy in such a case is to award R a sum of money as compensation in respect of the exclusive use by and benefit to A (120-2).

In India a large proportion of the lands, including many very large estates, is held in undivided shares, and if one shareholder can restrain another from cultivating a portion of the estate in a proper and husbandlike manner, the whole estate may, by means of cross injunctions, have to remain altogether without cultivation until all the shareholders can agree upon a mode of cultivation to be adopted, or until a partition by metes and bounds can be effected-a work which, in ordinary course, in large estates would prohably occupy a period including many seasons. In such a case, in a climate like that of India, land which had been brought into cultivation would probably become waste or jungle, and greatly deteriorated in value. In Bengal the Courts of justice, in cases where no specific rule exists, are to act according to justice, equity, and good conscience, and if, in a case of shareholders holding lands in common, it should be found that one shareholder is in the act of cultivating a portion of the lands which is not being actually used by another, it would scarcely be consistent with the rules above indicated to restrain him from proceeding with -Acts in Court - Acts of judicial character.

It is not merely in respect of acts in Court, acts redente curia, that an English Judge has immunity, but in respect of all acts of a judicial nature (308).

Held, therefore, that an order under the seal of the Foujdarry Court, to being a native into that Court, to be there dealt with on a criminal charge, is an act of a judicial nature, and whether there was any irregularity or error in it, or not, would be dispunishable by ordinary process at law (308): (Mr. Baron Parke.) - Juradiction limited - Judge with-Act without jurisdiction of- Liability for.

It is well settled that a Judge of a Court of Record in England, with limited jurisdiction, or a Justice of the Peace, acting judicially, with a special and limited authority, is not liable to an action of trespass for acting without jurisdiction, unless he had the knowledge or means of knowledge of which he ought to have availed himself, of that which constitutes the defect of jurisdiction (309). A Judge is not liable in trespass for want of jurisdiction, unless he knew, or ought to have known of the defect (310).

An affray having taken place in a village within the Zillah of .V. the police reported the particulars of the riot to the respondent, as acting Magistrate of the Foujdarry Court of the Zillah of N, and transmitted the depositions of the we unded persons, as well as some of the witnesses of the affray. The respondent, being of opinion that the appellant was concerned in the riot, directed an order for the apprehension of the latter, who was accordingly arrested, kept under surveillance, and was, after some days' investigation by the respondent, admitted to bail. But no further proceedings were taken against the appellant.

The appellant brought an action of trespass against the respondent to recover damages for the arrest and false imprisonment of the appellant by the respondent in his character of Judge and Magistrate, alleging that the appellant was a Europeau-born subject of the British Crown, that as such he was not answeralde to the general jurisdiction of the respondent, and that the special jurisdiction given by the 53rd Geo. III, C. 155, S. 105, did not warrant the mode of proceeding in the case.

It did not, however, appear from the evidence in the case, that the defendant-respondent was at any time informed of the European character of the plaintiff, or knew it before, or had such information as to make it incumbent on him to ascertain that fact.

Held, that the respondent was not liable (310).

Quaere whether, if distinct notice had been given by the plaintiff to the defendant, or proof brought forward that the defendant was well acquainted with the fact of his being British-born, the defendant would have been protected in the case, as being in the nature of a Judge of Record, acting irregularly within his general jurisdiction, or liable to an action of trespass, as acting by virtue of a special and limited authority, given by the statute, which was not complied with, and therefore altogether without jurisdiction (Mr. Baron Parke.) Statute 21 Geo. 111. C. 70-S. 24-Object and effect of.

S. 24 of the 21st Geo. III, C. 70, is as follows:-"And whereas it is reasonable to render the Provincial Magisstrates, as well natives as British subjects, more safe in the execution of their office, be it enacted, that no action for wrong or injury shall lie in the Supreme Court, against any person whatsoever, exercising a judicial office in the country courts, for any judgment, decree, or order of the said Court, nor against any person for any act done by or in virtue of the order of the said Court."

Held that, on the right construction of the section, its object was to put the Judges of the Native Courts on the footing of Judges of the Superior Courts of Record, or Courts having similar jurisdiction to the Native courts in England, protecting them from actions for things done within their jurisdiction, though erroneously or irregularly done, but leaving them liable for things done wholly without jurisdiction (306-7).

The true meaning of the section was to put the Judges of Native Courts of Justice on the same footing as those of English courts of similar jurisdiction. There seems no reason why they should be more or less protected than English Judges of general or limited jurisdiction, under the like circumstances. To give them an exemption from lia-bility, when acting bona fide in cases in which they had, though mistakenly, acted without jurisdiction, would be to place them on a better footing than English Judges or Magistrates, and to leave the injured individual wholly without civil remedy; for English Judges, when they act wholly without jurisdiction, whether they may suppose they had it or not, have no privilege; and the justices of the peace, whether acting as such, or in their judicial character, in cases of summary conviction, have no other than that of having notice of action, a limitation of time for bringing it, a restriction as to renne, the power of tendering amends, and of pleading the general issue, with certain advantages as to costs (307). Personal knowledge of-Importing into judgment of.

Propriety of.

It appears that the Zillah Judge so far forgot that it was necessary to have the evidence brought forward under legal sanction and in public, in such a way that there might be the means of controverting it, that he imported, as a ground of his decision, something which came within his own knowledge. It is to be regrested that any such circumstance should have taken place, and still more is it to be regretted, when the case came before the Superior Court, that circumstance of that kind should have been alluded to as one which ought, in the smallest degree, to have any effect upon the judgment of the Court. It was impossible to pass that by without making any observation upon it (200). (Lord Langdale). JESWANT SING JEE (1844) 3 M. I. A. 245 = P. JET SING JEE.

-Validtty -Public policy.

N, one of the Puisne Judges of the Supreme Court of Madras, purported, for a good and valuable consideration, to make an equitable assignment to the appellants of all his right and interest in the amount of six months' salary payable under the statute 6th of Geo. iv, c, 85. The question was whether it was in the power of N to assign that sum, and whether that assignment was or was not against public policy.

Held that the assignment was not against public policy

(446).

The six months' salary payable to N' under the statute was part of the estate of N, of the same description as if it had been a policy of assurance upon his life; that is to say, a certain sum of money to which he would be entitled upon the contingency of a certain event; over which he had complete power of disposition by assignment in his lifetime, or by testamentary disposition. That sum of money was not one which at any time during the lifetime of N could possibly have been appropriated to his use, or for his benefit, for the purpose of sustaining with decorum and propriety the high rank in life, in which he was placed. The principles upon which the decisions against the assignment of salaries by persons filling public offices are founded are inapplicable to the assignment of such a sum of money (446-3).

-- Default of appearance - Judgment of English Courts on-Remedy of aggrieved party.

Where a party makes default in any of the Courts below, and the judgment is perfected against him upon that default, it cannot be amended upon any suggestion, unless there has been misprision, and the judgment has been entered contrary to the truth of the proceedings, as judgment for the defendant instead of non-suit. So where on writ of error the plaintiff does not appear after joinder in error, the judgment is of affirmance (220-1). Setting aside of.

Legal judgments cannot be treated as mere counters in the game of litigation. They are serious pronouncements, for the most part of the judicial officer of the State, touch ing the rights of disputes of subjects, bringing home to those subjects what the rules of justice required and are enforceable, if need be, by the forces of the State. Moreover, when once pronounced, they cannot be lightly set aside (170). The Court has no jurisdiction after the judgment at the trial has been passed and entered to rehear the case. The only cases in which the Court can interfere after the passing and entering of the judgment are these (1) Where there has been an accident or sl'p in the judgment as drawn up, and (2) Where the Court itself finds the judgment as drawn up does not correctly state what the Court actually decided and intended (175). -Considering the habits and customs of the native inhabitants of India, their well-known propensity to forge any instrument which they might deem necessary for their interest, and the extreme facility with which false evidence can be procured from witnesses, the probability or improbability of the transaction forms a most important consideration in ascertaining the truth of any transaction relied upon. It is therefore the duty of the Court to examine with care how far the transaction relied upon is consistent with all the probabilities of the case (155-6). (Dr. Lushington). BUNWAREE LAL P. -A suit to enforce the specific performance of an agreement alleged to have been executed by the defendant appellant was dismissed by the first Court, it "being unable to hold that the agreement set up had been proved." Chief Court on appeal arrived at a totally different conclusion; it found that the document was signed by the defendant, and it accordingly reversed the decision of the first Court and decreed the plaintiff's claim. On appeal to the Privy Council, the only question for determination was as to the genuineness of the defendant's signature on the suit agreement, and, although the parties were at issue on this. the vital point in the case, there was otherwise singular unanimity on the general facts.

Held that, in the conflict of opinion between the Courts below, it was necessary for their Lordships to examine the admitted facts and circumstances as furnishing the safest guide to a correct conclusion (156-7).

Held further that in dealing with a case of that kind in which the parties were at issue on a vital question of fact, the safe principle was to consider which story fitted in with the admitted circumstances (162). Held that conjecture as to what might have led to a particular course of action was an uncertain guide and one liable to astray, and that unless the facts evidenced by documentary and oral testimony were so much at variance with known conditions as to be incapable of reasonable explanation, it was to those facts, and to those facts alone, that the Court must trust to reach a safe conclusion in the matter (217). The respondent, the Rajah of Faridkote, obtained in the Civil Court, of that native state two ex-parte judgments, in two suits instituted by him against the appellant, for certain sums of money and costs. Two actions, founded on those judgments, were brought by the Rajah against the appellant in the Court of the Assistant Commissioner of Lahore and were dismissed by that Court, on the ground that the judgments were pronounced by the Faridkote Court, without jurisdiction as against the appellant. The additional Commissioner of Lahore upheld those judgments on appeal. But the Chief Court of the Punjab differed from those tribunals, and upheld the jurisdiction of the Faridkote Court.

The appellant was for five years, beginning in 1869, in the service of the late Rajah of Faridkote as his treasurer; and the cause of action, on which the suits in the Faridkote Court were brought, arose within that State, and out of that employment of the appellant by the late Rajah. The claim made in each of the suits was merely personal, for money alleged to be due, or recoverable in the nature of damages from the appellant.

The appellant left the late Rajah's service, and ceased to reside within his territorial jurisdiction, in 1874. He was from that time generally resident in another independent native state, that of Jhind, of which he was a native subject and in which he was domiciled; and he never returned to Faridkote after he left in 1874. He was in Jhind when he was served with certain processes of the Faridkotcourt. He disregarded them, and never appeared in either of the suits instituted by the Rajah, or otherwise submitted himself to that jurisdiction.

Held, reversing the chief court and restoring the courts below, that the judgments of the Faridkote court were an absolute nullity by international law, and that the suits brought on foot thereof were not maintainable. Thereupon, the plaintiff applied for and obtained liberty to exhibit interrogatories. The defendant B omitted to answer the interrogatories exhibited to him as a result of which the plaintiff applied for and obtained an order striking out the defendant's (B's) defence and placing the defendant in the same position as if he had not defended, and a judgment was given to the plaintiff (A) for the amount claimed. The respondents tendered in evidence certain decrees of the years 1817 and 1845 relating to the suit mouzahs, which decrees sustained the respondent's claim to hold at fixed rents. The appellant's predecessors in title were, however, not parties to those decrees.

Held that, although the predecessor of the appellant was no party to those decrees, it was competent to use the judgments as evidence shewing the rent paid for the possession at and prior to that date, nearly eighty years before suit (68). -Legal and other senses of.

The word " judgment" is indeed popularly used in many different senses, as when one says a certain man is a man of sound judgment, meaning that he is possessed of the intellectual faculty of deciding rightly on facts or circumstances, or where even in legal matters the expression of the opinion formed in a case by a judge who dissents from his colleagues is commonly called his judgment, though it can have no effect whatever on the determination of the suit or action in which it is delivered (222). In its strict legal and proper sense, a "judgment" is a decision obtained in an action. Every other decision is an order (221). (Lord Atkinson.)

mind-Record of-Propriety.

The proper object of a judgment is to support, by the most cogent reasons that suggest themselves, the final conclusions at which the Judge has conscientiously arrived. Its excessive elaboration tends to impair its value by defeating the proper object of a judgment. In this case the judgment of the trial Judge records the fluctuations of the Judge's mind from day to day in the course of an exceptionally long trial; the effect, often temporary, upon him of a particular piece of evidence or argument of counsel; it subjects every witness to criticism more or less unfavourable; and from this mass of often conflicting statements, it is not easy for a Court of Appeal to extract the precise grounds on which the final conclusion rests (175). It cannot be inferred from such a ruling, that there was any implied decision, or even, as Mr. Mayne would put it, a dictum, in favour of the proposition that an assignment executed by all the urallers of any foundation of this kind would operate as an effectual transfer of their trust. The court merely decided on one patent defect of title, without considering whether, if that defect had not existed, the title could have been supported (82). (Sir James W. Colvile.) which the plaintiff was Zemindar being in arrear, the plaintiff brought a suit for the rent against C, the then andoubted owner of the dur-putni estate. C defended that suit on the ground that he had sold his interest in the durputni to his wife and son, that that sale was an absolute and hona fide one, and that by virtue of that sale his wife and son had become owners of the dur-putni interest and he (C) had no right or interest in it. The plaintiff's suit was on that defence dismissed. The plaintiff thereupon brought another suit for the same rent against C's wife and son, obtained a decree against them, and purchased the durpunti in execution of that decree.

suit against C, C purported to execute a mortgage of the dur-putni to Defendant No. 2, who afterwards sued upon that mortgage, obtained a decree, and purchased the right, title, and interest of C in execution in satisfaction of his mortgage.

In a suit brought by the plaintiff against Defendant No. 2, held that Defendant No. 2 was estopped from pleading that the sale of the dur-putni by C to his wife and son was a mere benami transaction, and that, notwithstanding that sale, C continued to be the real owner of the dur-putni.

Looking to what took place, the defendant No. 2 cannot be considered as having put himself, by reason of his purchase at the sale which he had brought about in execution of his decree on the mortgage bond, in a better position than he was in as mortgagee taking from C. It is admitted that, if he had claimed as a mortgagee or as an assignce of C, he would be estopped; and their Lordships think that he is substantially in the same position, that he did not by purchasing in this way put himself in a better position, and consequently that he is estopped by the statement which C made. offerings collected there were transmitted to the " pedi " in Bombay. While the defendant was in Bombay he received his followers, and when invited to do so he visited their houses. On the occasions of such visit he invariably received an offering in money, but no bargain for the money was made beforehand. Such offerings were stictly personal, and were not paid into the "pedi"

Held, that neither the payment of the offerings into the " pedi," nor the receipt of them by the defendant personally, constituted " carrying on business " within the meaning of cl. 12 of the Letters Patent (16). #### Concurrent jurisdiction—Court of.

-Meaning of .

As to what is a court of concurrent jurisdiction, it is material to notice that there is in India a great number of courts, that one main feature in the Acts constituting them is that they are of various grades with different pecuniary limits of jurisdiction, and that by the Code of Procedure a suit must be instituted in the court of the lowest grade competent to, try it. For instance, in Bengal, by the Bengal Civil Courts Act, No. 6 of 1871, the jurisdiction of a Munsif extends only to original suits in which the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute does not exceed Rs. 1,000. The qualifications of a Munsif and the authority of his judgment would not be the same as those of a District or of a Subordinate Judge, who have jurisdiction in Civil suits without any limit of amount. In their Lordships' opinion it would not be proper that the decision of a Munsif upon (for instance) the validity of a will or of an adoption in a suit for a small portion of the property affected by it should be conclusive in a suit before the District Judge or the High Court for property of a large amount the title to which might depend upon the will or the adoption. It is true that there is an appeal from the Munsif's decision, but that upon the facts would be to the District Court and not the High Court. And that the decision should be conclusive would be still more improper as regards many other of the various Courts in India, the qualifications of whose judges differ greatly. By taking concurrent jurisdiction to mean concurrent as regards the pecuniary limit as well as the subject-matter this evil or inconvenience is avoided (203-4). A challenge of the method of the exercise of the jurisdiction of a Court, can never in law justify a denial of the existence of such jurisdiction. The former has reference to the merits of the case. The familiar principle is laid down in a series of cases, of which the judgment of Lord Hobhouse in Malkarjun r. Narahari is not a very remote example. Their Lordships cannot countenance the laying aside of all that has happened in previous litigations, the allowing of a process to become final, and the institution of a fresh suit, the object of which is to declare that, although in terms it was applicable to a particular subject of the King-Emperor who was a party to the proceedings, still, upon a new application to Courts of justice, a different result should be reached, and it should be decided that the proceedings and decree did not apply to him (176). For the first time in the appeal to His Majesty in Council the defendant objected that the suit was not properly instituted in the Court of the Sub-Judge in question, having regard to the provisions of the Court Fees Act and the Suits Valuation Act,

Held that such an objection which, when analysed, rested on no sort of merit, but on the most technical of technicalities, could not be allowed to be raised at such a late stage. (Sir Lawrence Jenkins.) RACHAPPA SUBRAO JADHAY F.

SCOPE OF -ONE REASON ASSIGNED FOR PLEA-OTHER REASONS IN SUPPORT OF IT-CONSIDERATION OF.

Propriety of -Duty of court.

The appeal was from a judgment of the Supreme Court of Bombay on its Ecclesiastical side overruling a protest against its jurisdiction.

The suit in the Supreme Court was one for restitution of conjugal rights. The parties were Parsees, natives of the island of Bombay, and there resident. The wife brought the suit. The husband, in a protest, after the libel was given in, denied the jurisdiction of the court, and contended that it was incompetent to take cognizance of such a suit. The especial reason assigned for the incompetency of the court to exercise jurisdiction was, that the parties to the suit were not British subjects within the meaning of the Charter granting the Supreme Court Ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and the general averment of incompetency, no doubt, had reference to that reason. It was, therefore, argued before their Lordships that the protest against the jurisdiction should be confined to the particular objection assigned.

Their Lordships over-ruled the contention, observing: We think that in a case of this description, when the question substantially is, whether the court has jurisdiction to entertain the suit, or to state the case more accurately, whether from the particular nature of the subject-matter this case is not excepted from the general ecclesiastical jurisdiction conferred by the Charter, it is our duty to look at the whole record, and give judgment accordingly. If it be apparent on the face of the record that the suit is not maintainable, we think that there is enough in the protest to require us to express our opinion, though that protest may not have been intended to direct our attention to more than one particular objection (386). WAIVER OF-TRANSFER OF SUIT TO ANOTHER COURT-CONSENT TO, AFTER RAISING PLEA-EFFECT.

-Plea raised in transferred Court also.

A suit for damages for the alleged infringement of certain exclusive rights secured to the plaintiff by three patents was instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Cawnpore on 2-2-1882, while under S. 22 of the Indian Patent Act XV of 1859, it ought to have been instituted in the Court of the District Judge of Cawnpore. On the 15th of February, 1882, the defendant personally signed, alongwith the plaintiff and his pleader, a petition praying the District Judge to withdraw the case from the Court of the Subordinate Judge under S. 25 of Civil Procedure Code of 1877, and to try the suit in his own Court. On the same day an order was made in the District Court in these terms:- "That the case be transferred from the Subordinate Judge's Court to the file of this Court, and the date will be fixed hereafter." The District Judge had no power to make that order, either under S. 25 of Civil Procedure Code of 1877 or otherwise. In his written statement, filed in answer to the plaint, before the District Judge of Cawnpore, the defendant pleaded that the Judge had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, in respect it had not been regularly brought into Court. The question was whether the defendant did, in point of fact, waive all objection to the competency of the suit, and engage that the cause should be tried on its merits by the District Judge. The argument as to waiver really rested upon the single fact that the defendant personally concurred with the plaintiff and his pleader in petitioning the District Judge to transfer the suit, in terms of S. 25 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Held, that such a consent to a transfer did not operate as a waiver of the defendant's preliminary pleas or of any of his pleas (146).

The grounds of that petition had nothing to do with want of jurisdiction in the lower Court, but were ordinary grounds of convenience, which would justify the removal of a suit to the higher Court from the lower, assuming it to have been properly instituted there. consent to the transfer of the suit is professedly and in substance nothing more than a consent that the preliminary and other pleas of the defendant shall be disposed of by another than the Subordinate Judge (146). The suit was by the grandsons, sons of a deceased son, of a testator against A, one of the surviving sons of the testator and the manager of his estate under the terms of his will, for an account of the management of the joint estate and for payment to plaintiffs of their share of the rents and profits. The suit was brought in the Sub-Court of Meerut, within whose jurisdiction the testator had a large estate known by the name of Bilaspure. At the time the suit was brought, the defendant actually resided at Mussuri, a bill station, where he had a private house, in which he resided during the whole of the hot weather. The testator had also considerable landed and other property at Delhi and other places annexed for all civil purposes, to the Punjab, and notably an estate in the District of Hissar, of which the chief station was at Hansi. During the cold weather the defendant travelled through the estate, sometimes putting up at Hansi, sometimes at Delhi, and sometimes at Bilaspur, in one of the houses which had been maintained at the expense of the estate. The head office of the estate was at Hissar, in the Punjab.

The will of the testator showed that the testator contemplated that Bilaspur might be the principal place of residence of his family; and the evidence showed that an establishment of some kind was kept there, and that the defendant himself, though travelling for the most part during the cold weather about the estate, occasionally resided therefor periods of time more or less considerable. The defendant himself, in his written statement, stated that the accounts were lying for inspection by the sharers in the estate in the manager's office, which would remain at Bilas-

JURISPRUDENCE.

-Rule of . in new cases.

The rule of jurisprudence in new cases was stated by Lord Wensleydale thus : " This case is in some sense new, as many others are which continually occur, but we have no right to consider it because it is new as one for which the law has not provided at all; and because it has not yet been decided to decide it for ourselves, according to our judgment of what is right and expedient. Our common law system consists in the applying to new combinations of circumstances those rules of law which we derive from legal principles and judicial precedents, and for the sake of attaining uniformity, consistency, and certainty, we must apply those rules where they are not plainly unreasonable and inconvenient to all cases which arise; and we are not at liberty to reject them and to abandon all analogy to them, in those to which they have not yet been judicially applied, because we think that the rules are not as reasonable and convenient as we ourselves could have devised. It appears to us to be of great importance to keep this principle steadily in view, not merely for the determination of this particular case, but for the interests of law as a science" (68-9). #### Adoption among.

-Effect of-Woman adopted into another family-Inheritance to property of-Law governing.

The suits related to the inheritence of a woman named B. She and the persons who claimed to be entitled to her estate belonged to the tribe of Kanchans. In that tribe the business of brothel-keeping and prostitution was carried on by families or communities who were recruited by adoption.

B left her own family to be adopted by one D, who was the head of another establishment of the same kind. She joined D's establishment, and on D's death became its head, took the property there, and increased it by her own earnings. The question was as to the devolution of the property possessed by B at her death.

Held, that B was not by the adoption severed from her natural family and that her property, however, acquired, devolved according to Mahomedan Law (201).

It seems to their Lordships impossible to say that such customs as are proved in this case to exist among the Kanchans are not contrary to the policy of the great religious community to which the Courts have found that all the parties belong (202). -In the tribe of Kanchans the business of brothelkeeping and prostitution is carried on by families or communities who are recruited by adoption (198). Each family or community live a coenolitical, quasi-corporate life in the family brothels. All the members, including males, are entitled to food and raiment from the business, the males living a life of idleness at the expense of the females. There is no such thing as separate or individual succession upon death. All the members succeed jointly. No division or partition is allowed, for that would break up the establishments, and the witnesses say that the lamp should be kept burning in the house. A member of a family brothel who leaves it does so with only her clothes on her back and nothing more. The body is recruited by adoption. A girl is brought in as the adopted daughter of a female member of the institution, and the girl thus adopted is regarded as having ceased to belong to her own family (200). (Lord Hobbouse.) and 1817 the Peshwa's rights were ceded to the East India In 1820 the Gaekwar's rights were ceded.

What the nature of the power of the Peshwa and of the Gaikwar was regarded as matter of right, and what therefore they ceded to the East India Company was the subject of frequent and anxious inquiry on the part of the Board of Directors and the Government of Bombay; but no satisfactory result has ever been arrived at. The control of the British Indian Government over Kathiawar has been in operation without controversy for a very long series of years. And the nature and character of that control must be ascertained from the manner in which, and the principles upon which, it has, in fact, been exercised.

Their Lordships after tracing the history of this control (Vide 1. 1. R. 33 C. 245 (248), concluded.

During the period which has hitherto been under consideration (i.e., up to 1864), and in subsequent years, the political control exercised over Kathiawar has been very complete, but it has been exercised in different degrees in different classes of Kathiawar states. The intervention has never been carried further than was judged necessary, in the emergency, for the maintenance of peace, good order, and security. The position of the Chiefs has always heen respected; and, at least in the case of the more important among them, many of the functions commonly regarded as attributes of sovereignty have been preserved to them. Two suits were instituted in the Assistant Political Agent's Court in Kathiawar, one to enforce a mortgage, and the other to redeem a mortgage. The first was disposed of as a civil case, and the second as a political one, because in it a talukdar above the fourth class was a party. The suits were taken on appeal to the Political Agent and from him to the Governor of Bombay in Council.

Held that in both cases the action of the tribunals in Kathiawar, and of the Governor in Council on appeal from those tribunals was a purely political and not judicial action, and that no appeal lay to His Majesty in Council in such a case.

Kathiawar is not, as a whole, within the King's dominions, and the particular territories out of which these appeals arise have not been shown to be in a different position in this respect from the Province generally. It remained only to say what could be presumed as to the nature of a Khorposh grant the existence of which is not disputed, but of the terms of which there is no direct evidence. Both the Courts in India held that the most that could be assumed as to the duration of such a grant was that it was for the life of the grantee. They further held that such a grant, regarding it as one for the life of the grantee, could not be presumed to be more than a grant of rents and profits, and could not be presumed to carry with it a right to open mines and remove minerals, which are a portion of the soil. #### KHOT.

-Forests-Proprietorship of soil-Timber-Kight to -Agreement between khot and Government - Construction.

In the suit out of which the appeal arose the plaintiff claimed against the conservator of Forests in the Presidency of Bombay and the Sub-Collector of Kolaba in the Tanna Zillah, a three-fourths share of the proceeds of certain teak and izaili timber which he alleged was cut down by the Government in the village of Pigode. The plaint stated that the plaintiffs' share in the village of Pigode was acquired by him as the proprietor thereof, and he stated that it was his watani (hereditary) khoti and izafati (village). The principal question was whether he was the proprietor of the soil of three-fourths of the village, and as such proprietor entitled, as he alleged, to three fourths of the jungle, including teakwood as well as izaili.

The plaintiffs' rights under the izafati title depended upon two sunnuds, one dated in 1653, and the other in 1722. The effect of the first document was held to be simply to give the grantee as the Collector of the revenue certain perquisites arising out of the dues, and to convert that right, which was then a mere personal right with reversion to the sovereign, into an hereditary right which was to descend to his children and to his children's children. The sunnud of 1653 was held to give no proprietary right in the village, no interest in the soil, and no right to the timber. As the sunnul of 1722 was also held not to convey any interest in the soil, and was held merely to give a certain right to certain cesses or dues as the perquisites of the grantee as the Collector of the Government revenue, their Lordships held that plaintiffs' izafati rights did not give him the right of proprietorship (58-9).

As regards plaintiffs' right to the proprietorship of the soil and to the timber upon it, by virtue of his khoti, it appeared that an express agreement was entered into on the part of the Khot that he would preserve all the trees in the Government reserves, and that he would preserve the teakwood trees that might be growing in the village in places other than the survey numbers.

Held, that the plaintiff could not in the face of that agreement, whatever his rights might have been as a Khot, maintain that he had the proprietary title to the threefourths of the whole jungle (forest) of the village, including teakwood as well as inferior wood (61).

Held, affirming the High Court, that the plaintiff's suit ought to be dismissed with costs. (Sr. Barnes Peaceck.) NAGARDHAS SANBHAGYADAS P. THE CONSERVATOR OF FORESTS AND THE SUB-COLLECTOR OF KOLABA.

The laches of a party in taking steps to enforce his rights would be a circumstance entitled to great weight in a case in which there is a substantial conflict of evidence touching the right sought to be enforced. The suit was to recover possession of certain mouzahs included in a Mokurary Istimrary lease under which the defendants claimed to hold the mouzahs. The lease in question was of the year 1795. The grant according to the plaintiff was to H alone, and for life only, in which case the tenure terminated in or about 1819, when H died. The suit was instituted only in 1851. The defendant's case was that the grant was to H and his brothers jointly, and to their respective heirs. The question for decision was which version of the nature of the tenure was correct.

Practice of, in India in country cases.

It is familiar enough that in country cases all over India claimants intentionally defer the commencement of suits till they are all but time-harred-a practice so deeply rooted, that it is useless to protest against it, but it is with equal surprise and regret that their Lordships notice the extension of this evil practice to mercantile transactions in Calcutta. Demurrer for want of equity-Maintainability.

Disputes arose in a joint Hindu family, and a suit was brought in 1810 in the Supreme Court to ascertain the ress pective rights of the members of the family in the joinestate. In 1811, a compromise was entered into by two of the defendants, members of the family, and the plaintiffi who executed a release to them. The litigation of the sut, continued, and in 1820, these two defendants were allowed by the Court to rely upon the release, and the plaintiff to impeach it, but it did not appear that the release had ever been the subject of adjudication. In 1853, the cause wat heard upon further directions, when a considerable sum was found to be due to the then plaintiff, by one of these defendants, setting up the release, which was charged by the bill not to have been at issue in the previous litigation, a demurrer was filed for want of equity, and allowed by the Supreme Court. Such demurrer over-ruled upon appeal, as it was not clear by the bill that the length of time from the date of the release operated as a bar to the relief sought, so as to allow of such a demurrer. - Title to-Proof of-Quantum.

In the year 1836, upon the death of Tegum Sumroo, the Government of India resumed her pergunnah of Badshapur Jarma, lying on the west bank of the Jumna river, the revenue whereof was Rs. 79,000 and odd. It was claimed by the Begum's heirs as an " Altumgah Jageer," i.e., a grant under the royal seal. To try the right of the Government to effect that annexation the suit out of which the appeal arose was brought on behalf of Mr. Dyre Sombre, claiming as heir of the Begum Sumroo, and represented by the appellants before their Lordships. The appellants did not claim merely a Zemindary interest in the lands. They claimed to hold them rent free; that is, free from assessment to Government revenue. The question for decision was whether they had established by trustworthy evidence the title to the suit estate on a rent free tenure (capable of passing to Mr. Dyre Sombre by the deed of gift, or subsequent will of the Begum Sumroo.

Weighing the direct evidence in favour of the Sunnuds, weak and suspicious as it was, against the presumption arising from the non-production of the original sunnud, and the failure to account for it; and against the still stronger presumption arising from the acts, representations, and conduct of the Begum in her lifetime, their Lordships came to the conclusion that the appellants failed to establish the title which they set up (31.2)

To decree in favour of a title to an hereditary and transmissible lakhiraj estate on evidence so untrustworthy, would be contrary to the long established practice of the Courts in India, and such a decision would be a dangerous precetime in.

The Regulations touching ordinary resumption suits by Government cast upon the person who claims to hold land lakhiraj, or free from assessment to Government revenue, the burden of establishing a title recognised by law as sufficient to give that exceptional immunity, and require very stringent proof in such cases (19).

Regulation II of 1819, by its 28th section provides that an ancient sunnud shall not be treated as sufficient proof of its contents on the faith of its seal, or without confirmatory evidence. And S. 3 of Regulation 14 of 1825; also shows the high degree of proof required. Nor are such provisions unreasonable, since every grant of this kind implies a perpetual alienation in favour of some individual, and his heirs, of a portion of the land revenue (the impost, if impost it is to be called, which immemorial custom has made the most natural and tolerable to the natives of India), and thus operates not only in derogation of the rights of future governments, but to the injury of the subject, on whom the incidence of taxation for the necessary purposes of Government will be the heavier, in proportion as the public revenue is wasted by such alienations (19). The point that the right of the Government to assess the villages in suit was barred by cl. (2), S. (2) of Regulation II of 1805, by reason of 60 years having elapsed since the right of Government to assess the lands had accrued, was not raised in the Courts below, and was not distinctly stated in the printed cases before the Privy Council. The point arose incidentally in the course of the discussion at the hearing of the appeal before the Privy Council. The question was whether it ought to be allowed to be raised or not. It was suggested, as an objection to the point being allowed to be raised, that there might be circumstances which were not known to their Lordships, which might prevent the application of a law which apparently was distinctly applicable to the case.

Held, over-ruling the objection, that the point must be allowed to be raised (510).

Now, in the first place, the proceedings in the case were not proceedings in a regular suit. There were no pleadings, and, therefore, it would be rather hard to bind the parties by an objection of so technical a nature, especially if on investigation it is found to have a valid ground of defence (509). In a case in which the appellant, the Raja of Burdwan, claimed the exemption of 18 villages in his Zemindary from assessment to the Government revenue, as being Lakhiraj lands, held that the right of the Government to assess the villages in question was barred by the clause (2) Section 2. of Regulation II of 1805, by reason of 60 years having elapsed since the right of Government to assess the lands had accrued (508-10).

It appears to their Lordships that the claim would be barred by the lapse of 60 years in this case, unless the case can be taken out of the operation of the Regulation of Limitation upon the ground stated in the argument.

It was said that the limitation which is contained in the Regulation of 1805 does not apply, because it refers to Courts of Civil Justice; that is very true, but it is quite clear, that the principle of that Regulation would be rendered wholly nugatory, unless it were extended to the case which is now before their Lordships, in which the Collector's Court must be considered for this purpose a Court of Civil Justice. There is, therefore, nothing in that ground of exception (508-9). (Mr. Pemberton Leigh). MAHA RAJA DHEERAJ RAJA MAHATAB P. THE GOVERNMENT OF BENGAL (1849 50) 4 M I.A. 466 = 1 Sar. 385.

-liability for-Exemption from-Claim to, based ongrant prior to 12-8-1765-Proof of Bengal Regula-tion XIX of 1793 and XIV of 1825.

By the Regulations XIX of 1793 and XIV of 1825 proof is required from a person claiming lands to be exempt from assessment to Government revenue, as being Lakhiraj lands, of a grant made by some one, of lands, to hold in Lakhiraj, and by hereditary right, prior to the 12th of August, 1765, and that possession was hone fide taken under it, or an enjoyment of lands, as such, and descendible to heirs at and since that time (497).

The claim of the appellant was to the exemption of lands, consisting of 18 villages, in his Zemindary, from assessment to the Government revenue, as being Lakhiraj lands. The question was whether the appellant's title by a grant made prior to the 12th of August, 1765, had been made out,

Held that it had not been, first, because the grantee in Lakhiraj, B, was not proved ever to have been bona fide in possession after the grant; recordly. T, the grantor, afterwards, and before the 12th of August, 1765, was admitted to have got back the property (whether by purchase or not, or for a full consideration, did not appear), and was sued for the arrears of a charge upon it made by him to the said B, in 1762, which became subsequently the subject of a suit, in 1792, by his heir against the heir of T; so the heirs of the grantor and not of the grantee, remained in posse s'on; thirdly, the grant was stated by the appellant's vakil, to have been made to M, who was the managing Dewan in the name of B, and such a grant bore with it the strongest suspicion of being a fraudulent contrivance, to deprive the ruling power of its lawful share of the revenue, and to be exactly such a transaction, as it was the avowed object of the Regulation to defeat (497-8).

If the deed had been made bona fide, the grantee proved to have been in possession, and the grantor proved to have bona fide purchased afterwards from him the property for a valuable consideration, and so acquired all its rights, the heirs might have been entitled (498). #### Revenue - Assessment to-(Contd.)

The claim of the appellant, the Raja of Burdwan, was to the exemption of the turuf of Tajpoor, consisting of 18 villages, in his Zemindary, from assessment to the Government revenue, as being Lakhiraj lands. The question was whether the claim could be supported on the ground that it had been ratified and confirmed by the Government.

In the year 1795 the Zemindaries of the then Raja of Burdwan were attached, and the collection of the revenue derivable from them, was made by the officers of Government. The suit villages, then in possession of the wives and sisters of the Maharaja were attached at the same time. Sometime after the attachment of the zemindary, the title deeds of the villages were deposited in the Collector's office, and a reference of the case was made to the Governor-General in Council. In 1795, in consequence of an order made by the Governor-General in Council, the Maharaja was again put in charge of his zemindary lands, and the papers of the zemindary delivered to him, and the title-deeds of Tajpoor, etc., ordered to be returned to Maharanees.

Held that the claim could not be supported on the ground that it had been ratified and confirmed by the Government by the transactions in 1795 (500).

The transactions in 1795 clearly do not fall within the terms of the Regulation, which does not give the power of confirmation to be exercised in that manner; and we cannot help thinking, that it would be a strange thing to hold that this order, which, in truth, is the only evidence of enjoyment offered on the claimant's part, and which, by the Regulation, has no direct effect, in establishing the exemption, should yet be sufficient evidence for the claimant of everything necessary to give him a title (500-1). [Mr. Baren Parks.] MAHA RAJA DHEERAJ RAJA MAHATAB. THE GOVERNMENT OF BENGAL.

Liability for - Exemption from Claim to, on ground of enjoyment of land as lakhiraj at and from 12-8-1765-Proof A-Onus - Quantum - Hereditary succession-Exidence of Bengal Regulations XIX of 1793 and XIV of 1825.

The next ground on which the claim (of the exemption of lakhiraj land from assessment to Government revenue) is rested, is that of enjoyment, at and from the 12th of August, 1765, as Lakhiraj, which would be a good title, irrespective of the deed (of grant prior to 12th of August, 1765).

Now by the terms of Regulations (XIX of 1793 and XIV of 1825), the claimant is to prove this, and the reason he is called upon to give such proof, is, there being a strong presumption against the validity of such titles (as appears by the recitals in the Regulations themselves), and in order to guard the Government against the frauds of its own officers. It is not enough then for a claimant to say, "you, the Government, could prove the payment of the revenue, if any was paid, and I rely upon the absence of your evidence to make out any title and show that it was not paid." He must show his own title to exemption, and prove by some evidence on his part, that no revenue was collected, and must carry back that evidence to 1765. We should suppose that in the Collector's Cutchery for that District, evidence might be found of the receipt of the revenue, as far back, which might afford an inference of the non-payment for this property. It is clear, however, that the Regulations require the claimant to prove his possession, and it is presumed that the Government would not require a proof which could not reasonably be given, if the exemption was a just and fair one (498.9).

LAKHIRAJ LANDS-(Contd.)

Revenue-Assessment to-(Contd.)

Further, if the case is to rest on possession, there must be evidence, that it was an hereditary possession, or possession of exemption, descendible to heirs according to Regulation XIV of 1825 (500). Mere enjoyment in succession is, by the express terms of the Regulations, not enough (500).

Held, on the evidence in the case, that the appellant who claimed exemption from assessment to Government revenue of certain lands in his zemindary, as being Lakhiraj lands, had failed to establish his claim on the ground of enjoyment, at and from the 12th of August, 1765, as Lakhiraj (500). The true character of the native title to land throughout the Empire, including South and West Africa :-

With local variations the principle is a uniform one. The notion of individual ownership is foreign to native ideas. Land belongs to the community and not to the individual. The title of the native community generally takes the form of a usufructuary right, a mere qualification of a burden on the radical or final title of whoever is sovereign. Obviously such a usufructuary right, however difficult to get rid of by ordinary methods of conveyancing, may be extinguished by the action of a paramount power which assumes postession or the entire control of the land. ## LAND ACQUISITION ACT (X OF 1870).

——Ss. 39 and 40. Proviso—Compensation money— Apportionment of —Decision under S. 39 as to—Sust to contest correctness of —Maintainability.

Lands situated within the zemindary of the appellant and forming mal lands of his zemindary, were acquired under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act of 1870. Under S. 14 of that Act the Collector made an award for the whole amount of the compensation. Disputes having arisen between the appellant and the occupiers of those lands with reference to the apportionment of the amount, the question was referred under S. 38 of the Act to a Judge, and he made a decision under S. 39 of the Act as to the proportion in which the compensation money was to be taken by the parties. The appellant, who was dissatisfied with the decision, did not appeal from it, but filed a suit for the recovery of the excess amount in deposit in the collectorate to which he alleged he was entitled out of the compensation amount.

Held, that the suit was unsustainable (93). (Sir Robert P. Collier.) RAJAH NILMONI SINGH P. RAM BUNDHOO ROY. (1881) 8 I. A. 90 = 7 C. 388 =

The Proviso to S. 40 of the Land Acquisition Act of 1870 applies only to persons whose rights have not been adjudicated upon in pursuance of Ss. 38 and 39 of that Act, and it has not the effect, which it would certainly not be reasonable to attribute to it, of permitting a person whose claim has been adjudicated upon in the manner pointed out by the Act, to have that claim re-opened and again heard in another suit (92.3). Such a proviso as that in S. 40 of the Land Acquisition Act of 1870, which appears to have been hat a repetition of a provision in a previous Act in pari matiria, is necessary in this, as in almost all Acts of a similar character. It is necessary for the Government, or the person or company entitled to take property compulsorily, to deal with those who are in possession or ostensibly the owners; but it may happen, and frequently does happen, that the real owners, possibly being infants or persons under disability, do not appear, and are not dealt with in the first instance; and therefore a provision of this sort is necessary for the purpose of enabling the parties who have a real title to obtain the compensation money (92). ### LAND ACQUISITION ACT (I OF 1894)-(Contd.)

The conduct of the Collector acquiring land under the Land Acquisition Act may be directly relevant to the question whether or no his award is valid. Its only relevance to the question of compensation is this—that it might have been found that the average of prices on which he relied was brought about by his own use of improper means (136). Colourable attempt to obtain title under Act with out paying for land—What amounts to—Validity of acquisition in case of.

The suit property originally belonged to the appellant, the Maharajah of Dhurbangah. At a time when the appellant was a minor, under the care of the Court of Wards of the Province of Bengal, a declaration was published in the Calcutta Gazette. in accordance with S. 6 of the Land Acquisition Act of 1870, that the suit land was required to be taken by Government, at the expense of the Darbhanga Municipality for a public purpose. The Court of Wards for the District of Darbhanga was the Commissioner of Patna, and the representative of the Commissioner in Darbhanga was the Collector for the time being of Darbhanga, who was also cx officio chairman of the Darbhanga Municipality.

The manager of the appellant's estate appointed by the Court of Wards doubted his power to alienate raj land except for the purposes mentioned in S. 68 of Bengal Act IV of 1870. The Commissioner of Patna, however, sanctioned the making over of the land to the Municipality free of cost, for the construction of a public ghat, the Collector offering the manager one rupee compensation. The Collector never made an award under his hand fixing the amount of conpensation payable to the parties interested as required by the Land Acquisition Act; but he wrote to the manager offering him one rupee as compensation for the land in question. The Board of Revenue authorized the acceptance by the manager of the compensation of one rupee. The rupee was paid by the Collector, and the manager gave a receipt for it, describing it as a nominal compensation for the raj land taken up by the Darbharga Municipality. The land was thereupon taken possession of by the Municipality, a bathing ghat was erected upon a portion of it, and the rest was used by the Municipality as a market.

Held, that the land was not validly acquired by the Municipality, under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, and that the appellant was therefore, entitled to recover possession of the same from the Municipality (95).

The provisions of the Land Acquisition Act had not been complied with. The Collector made no inquiry into the value of the land. He was the chairman of the Municipality, and his sole object appears to have been to benefit the town, forgetting that, as the representative of the Court of Wards, it was his duty to protect the interests of the minor, and to see that the provisions of the Act were complied with. The offer of one rupee compensation was not in accordance with the duty of the Collector under Ss. 11 and 13 of the Act, and it would be altogether wrong to treat one rupee as the amount of compensation determined under S. 13 of the Act. The direction or suggestion to offer one rupee compensation was a colourable way of doing indirectly what it was seen could not be done directly, viz., the guardian making a present to the town of the land of his ward. The offer and acceptance of the rupee was a colourable attempt to obtain a title under the Land Acquisition Act without paying for the land (94-6). (Sir Richard Couch.) -S. 3 (a)-Permanently fastened-Meaning of-Machinery on land-Permanently fastened or temperarily attached to it-Test.

The epithet "permanently" in S. 3 (a) of the Land Acquisition Act of 1894 is used as an antithesis to "temporarily."

Proceedings were taken under the Land Acquisition Act as to land of which the respondents were tenants, and upon which there was certain machinery. The machinery constituted an oil-mill plant which had been installed in the premises by a previous tenant about 25 previously. It consisted of a boiler, an engine with water heater, 112 ghannies, a forge, and a lathe. The boiler stood on masonry and was built round almost to the top with masonry walls, having flues at the top and sides. engine was fixed to a masonry foundation by bolts, plates, and nuts. The heater was placed on a foundation without bolts, but was connected with the engine. Each ghanny consisted of a revolving mortar on an iron pedestal with a connected pestle; the pedestal was fixed by bolts to a foundation of wood embedded in masonry. The machinery could be removed for the purpose of repairs, on in the case of the boiler, for statutory inspection.

Held that the said attachments were anything but temporary and fell absolutely within the word "permanently." and that the machinery was therefore "land" within the meaning of S. 3 of the Land Acquisition Act of 1894. (Viscount Dunedin.) SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA

-Inquiry into value of land under-Administrative and net judicial proceeding.

Appellant's objection is based and defends upon the theory that the inquiry by the Collector under S. 9 of the Land Acquisition Act as to the value of the land assumed to be "needed" was a judicial proceeding, and that the rules of judicial proceedings apply. The argument of the appel-lant starts from the word "award" (which is used to describe the conclusion of the Collector), and has nothing else to support it. When the sections relating to this matter are read together, it will, however, be found that the proceedings resulting in this "award" are administrative and not judicial (100-1). (Lord Robertson.) -Inquiry into value of land under-Information obtained behind back of oconer-Use of-Propriety.

The remaining question relates to the second inquiry under S. 9 of the Act, which is as to the value of the land now assumed to be " needed". Shortly stated, the objection of the appellant, the owner of the land, is that the Collector who conducted the inquiry and made the "award" availed himself of information supplied to him without the knowledge of the appellant, and not disclosed at the inquiry. It is not suggested that there was in the proceedings anything corrupt or fraudulent, and the objection is based and depends upon the theory that the inquiry by the Collector was a judicial proceeding, and that the rules of judicial proceedings apply.

The inquiry is not a judicial proceeding, the rules of judicial proceedings do not apply to such an inquiry and the objection taken is, therefore, unsustainable (101).

It is, to say the least, perfectly intelligible that the expert official charged with the duty of fixing value should be possessed of all the information in the hands of the department, and should at the same time avail himself of all that is offered at the inquiry, his ultimate duty being, not to conclude the owner by his so-called award, but to fix the sum which in his best judgment is the value and should be offered. It is not implied in this observation that the Collector would be precluded by anything in the statute from inviting at the inquiry the criticism of the owner or any information he had in his hands if he thought that in the circumstances this would advance knowledge; but this is for his discretion (101). -S. 18-Reference under-What amounts to-Claim

LAND ACQUISITION ACT (I OF 1894)-(Contd.) S. 18-(Contd.)

S. 15 of the Land Acquisition Act of 1870 says that if the Collector considers that further inquiry as to the nature of the claim should be made by the Court, or if he is unable to agree with the persons interested as to the amount of compensation to be allowed, he shall refer the matter to the determination of the Court in manner after appearing.

In a case in which land of the appellant, who was then a minor and whose estate was under the management of the Coart of Wards, was ostensibly taken under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, the Collector paid, and the manager of the estate under the Court of Wards accepted, on 19-8-1875, one rupee, describing it as a nominal compensation for the raj land taken up. A reference to the Civil Court was made by the Collector on 7-2-1876, months after the rupee had been paid and accepted. That acceptance as compensation was stated in the reference, and it was also stated that all the claimants for compensation except four had agreed to the Collector's award, and accepted the compensation tendered to them. Then facts were set forth as to the four claimants, and the amounts of compensation tendered to them. The document then concluded: 'As they have refused to accept this compensation, and as it appears to the officiating Collector that their claims are preposteroasly high and there is no chance of their coming to terms, the matter is referred to the District Judge for decision under Ss. 15 and 18 of the Land Acquisition Act.

Held that that could not be held to be a reference of a claim to compensation by the manager of the Darbhanga estate, his claim being treated as settled, and that the High Court erred in holding that on that reference the whole matter was open to the District Judge, and that he could inquire whether or not the consent of the manager was binding on the minor (90.7). -Contract binding between parties interested as to

LAND ACQUISITION ACT (I OF 1894)-(Contd.) S. 23-Market-value of land-(Contd.)

The foundation of the appellant's case rests on the assertion that when once proceedings for compulsory acquisition under the Land Acquisition Act have been set on foot, the interested parties (the owner and the acquiring party) cannot come to any binding agreement regulating the amount of the purchase price. There is nothing whatever in the Land Acquisition Act itself to negative any such right. If the parties before the institution of the proceedings contemplated by that Act chose to agree, they were perfectly competent to do so and there is nothing whatever in the words of the Act to suggest that this power is thereby taken away The Act certainly does not directly affect such a result, nor can their Lordships ascertain any reason why the fact that compulsory powers have been invoked in order to secure property from unwilling vendors, should be regarded as denuding all parties of rights they possessed before the proceedings began. Parties, who were competent before the proceedings to agree what they thought was the right price for the property, remain competent after the proceedings and an agreement so made is capable of being enforced in the courts in the ordinary way.

The fact that the interested parties have entered into a binding contract as to the price will not effect the jurisdiction of the Collector to determine what in his view the price should be. (Lord Buckmaster.) FORT PRESS CO. 1. BOMBAY CORPORATION. (1922) 49 I. A. 331 (334-5)=

-Date for ascertaining-Declaration under S.6-Award-Dates of-Change in condition of land between-Effect of.

By Ss. 13 and 24 of the Land Acquisition Act of 1870, the market value of the land at the time of the awarding of compensation is to be taken into consideration. S. 25 points to the time when the land is acquired as the time for ascertaining its value. Independently of that provision, it would lead to very strange and capricious results if changes in the condition of the land between the time when it was taken and the actual conclusion of the award were to increase or to lessen its value. The time of awarding compensation must be construed as meaning the time of compensationthe time at which the right to compensation attaches.

Portions of land, which had been used as public roads for upwards of half a century, were taken for a public purpose under the Land Acquisition Act, 1870, for a dock. Held that, assuming the plaintiffs to have made out an absolute title thereto, they were under the Act entitled only to compensation, and that the land as road had no market value within the meaning of Ss. 13 and 24 at the date of its acquisition for a public purpose. Held further that the fact that by the time when the compensation was awarded the roads had been broken up and the land belonged absolutely to the plaintiffs, free from the burden of the roads and capable of being used for any purpose, could not increase or lessen its value. -Decision of Indian Courts as to-Privy Council's interference with-Conditions.

It is impossible to conceive anything more inconvenient than that a court in this country should be called upon to review the determination of arbitrators as to the value of a piece of land in India-a mere question of fact-without the advantage of any local knowledge or the privilege of seeing the witnesses, or even the opportunity and the interest of viewing the property (201). This is an appeal against the valuation which has been made of the property over which a right of pre-emption was claimed. Now this Board will not interfere with any question of valuation unless it can be shown that some item has improperly been made the subject of valuation, or excluded therefrom, or that there is some fundamental principle affecting the valuation which renders it unsound. On the mere question of value of admitted items their Lordships will not interfere. In the present instance the case lodged by the respondents complains only of the character of the valuation as a valuation and does not attempt to impeach it on any of the grounds to which reference has been made. Their Lordships cannot therefore interfere in such a case (263-4). (Lord Buckmaster.) CHARAN DAS v. AMIR KHAN. (1920) 47 I. A. 255-CHARAN DAS D. AMIR KHAN. 48 C. 110 (118) = 3 P. W. -It has been repeatedly laid down by the Board that they will not interfere with judgments of the courts in India as to matters involving valuation of property and similar questions where knowledge of the circumstances and of the district may have an important bearing on the conclusion reached, unless there is something to show, not merely that, on the balance of evidence, it would be possible to reach a different conclusion, but that the judgment cannot be supported as it stands, either by reason of a wrong application of principle, or because some important point in the evidence has been overlooked or misapplied.

Held, that this principle was applicable to an appeal brought under S. 26, sub-S. 2 of the Land Acquisition Act of 1921 (Amending the Act of 1894) in which the sole question was as to the amount of compensation to be awarded to the appellant for property acquired under the Act (135). -Appeals in valuation cases will be entertained by the Board only on questions of principle. Errors in law, including errors in appreciating or applying the rules of evidence or the judicial methods of weighing evidence, are matters that can and will be dealt with on appeal by this Board, but when a difference of opinion has occurred between two Indian Courts upon the number of rupees per yard to be allowed for a plot of land, as to which their Lordships can form no opinion of their own, it would be alike unprofitable and impracticable to embark on a comparison of the decisions of these courts. In cases relating to the acquisition of land the whole matter, both of fact and law, is a proper subject of appeal in India, for their local knowledge and experience enable the learned judges to form useful judg-ments upon the whole case. nant to the evidence, and as based on sounder principles than that of the Zuzzikar Court.

The Vice Consul had, for such an inquiry as this, more than the usual advantages of a Court of first instance; for, besides examining the witnesses, he knew the locality and visited the spots in dispute. Moreover, the Vice Consul explains much more fully than does the Zanzibar Court the mode in which he deduces his values from the evidence; and the values he brings out are not at nearly so great a distance from those which he examines.

It is quite true that in all valuations, judicial or other, there must be room for inferences and inclinations of opinion which, being more or less conjectural, are difficult to reduce to exact reasoning or to explain to others. Everyone who has gone through the process is aware of this lack of demonstative proof in his own mind, and knows that every expert witness called before him has had his own set of conjectures, of more or less weight according to his experience and personal sugarity. In such an inquiry as the present, relating to subjects abounding with uncertainties and on which there is little experience, there is more than ordinary room for guesswork; and it would be very unfair to require an exact exposition of reasons for the conclusions arrived at (139). ——Determination of—Basis proper of—Price accepted by other owners of adjacent lands acquired at same time if a—S. 21—Effect.

In a case in which the lands of several different owners were acquired under the Land Acquisition Act, all of them, except the appellant, accepted the Collector's award. The appellant did not do so and had the valuation of his land referred to the Court under S, 18 of the Act. The District Judge carefully addressed himself to all the considerations pertinent to the appellant's own lands, had due regard to the attitude of the other owners in not objecting to the Collector's award, and awarded to the appellant compensation on a certain basis. The appellate Court reversed his judgment, ignoring all the considerations pertinent to the appellant's own lands and founding itself exclusively on the evidence as to the price accepted for the other plots. That evidence, when analysed, however, showed, that the lands of the different owners were not of a uniform value for any purpose and that the fact that the other owners had accepted the Collector's award was very unreliable as a basis of the true value even of their own land, Held that the appellate Court had, in reversing the District Judge, acted on a wrong principle, and that its judgment must be set aside and that of the District Judge restored.

It is hardly too much to say that the appellate Court, in its exclusive reliance upon the artitude of the owners other than the appellant, were within as ace of ignoring the probabition imposed upon them by S. 21 of the Land Acquisition Act and of extending the range of the inquiry beyond the statutory limit thereby set. In ascertaining the value of the land taken under the Land Acquisition Act, the Court is to take into consideration the market value of the land at the date of the publication of the declaration under S. 6, and is not, on the one hand, to give more because the object for which it is taken is likely to increase its value, nor, on the other land, to give less because the same object is likely to increase the value of the owner's remaining land. This excludes for both parties speculations on the effects which the object for which the land is taken may produce on prices, except to the extent to which it is shown that such speculations had actually entered into the market price of the sort of land taken by the date of the publication of the declaration (134, 141, 143). Land, which was in occupation and the property of the appellant, was, along with other land, acquired by the Government under the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, by a notification under S. 6 of that Act, which was served only on 4-11-1920. The Government, however, managed to take possession of the lands so acquired sometime previously and erected buildings thereon. On a reference made under S. 18 of the Act the Courts below refused to allow the value of the building erected by the Government upon the appellant's land to be considered in assessing the amount of compensation to be paid to the appellant, held, that he was only entitled to compensation for the occupation of the land by the Government before the notification of 4-11-1920, and awarded such compensation in the form of interest on the value of the land computed from the date when the Government took possession.

Held, affirming the Courts below that, as the Government were in a position by law at any moment to regularise their position by a notification under S. 6 of the Act they must be considered to have been in possession, prior to that notification, "not as mere trespassers" but under such a colour of title that the buildings erected by them on the land ought not to be included in the valuation as having become the property of the landowner, and that the justice of the case was met by holding that the appellant was entitled to compensation for the occupation of the lands by the Government before the notification of 4—11—1920. Granite quarries and temples and sculpture-Land containing-Lease by wanter of right of quarrying over portions of property-Valuation of land in case of Method at

In proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act of 1870 for the acquisition of a plot of land containing granite quarries besides ancient temples and sculpture. the District Judge found that the only evidence available to him of the value of the ownership was a lease by which the owner, the value of the property for five years, at the rent af Rs. 140 a year. He found that at the same rate a right of quarrying over the whole area might command a rent of Rs. 200. On that sum he allowed twenty-five years' purchase, bringing out the sum of Rs. 5,000 as the value of the stone.

On appeal the High Court thought that the District Judge had awarded too much in respect of the Zemindar's rent. They thought that the basis of calculation should be the actual rent of Rs. 140 instead of the estimated rent of Rs. 200; and that instead of 25 years only 15 should be allowed. That cut down the market value to Rs. 2,100.

— Workmen employed on land—Loss of carnings of— Compensation for—Award to owner of land of—Legality of

In proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act, 1870 for the acquisition of a plot of land containing granite quarries, one of the learned Judges of the High Court, in assessing the compensation payable, held that the District Judge had erred in omitting to notice the evidence as to the actual profits earned by the persons who worked the quarties. He referred to evidence shewing that there were about 46 persons in the village who earned their livelihood by stone -quarrying; and, calculating their annual profits at Rs. 100 a piece, he concluded that the amount of profits of which the claimants would annually be deprived might be set down at Ks. 4,600. On that amount he allowed ten years' purchase, and so brought out a sum of Rs. 46,000, which he said was the damage sustained by the persons interested by reason of the acquisition injuriously affecting their property or earnings. The other learned Judge agreed as to the amount of compensation awarded by his colleague, but not in his reasoning. He said that no question arose with respect to loss of earnings under clause 3 of S. 24 of the Act. But he added that the only way of ascertaining the market value was to take the aggregate of the profits or earnings derived from the land and to capitalise it.

Held that, in including the earnings of the quarrymen, whether directly as earnings injuriously affected, or indirectly as swelling the market value, and the estimated loss of those earnings, as an element in the compensation, the High Court had introduced an erroneous principle (88).

No compensation is tendered by the Collector or ordered by the Act, except to persons interested in the land. If the acquisition injuriously affects the earnings of the person interested, he is to obtain further compensation beyond the market value of the land. But no compensation is given to persons not interested in the land, on the ground that their earnings may be affected by the change of ownership, or in deed on any ground. The 46 quarrymen are no more interested in the land than a ploughman or a digger is interested in the land on which he works for wages. Nor are their earnings the earnings of the Zemindar, who is interested. The market value of a property is not increased by the circumstance that a number of persons work on it and so earn their livelihood. That is no profit to the owner; it may be expense to him. And the award of the High Court has the extraordinary result of putting a large sum into the pocket of the Mudaliars (the owners) on the ground that some of their nighbours will be injured by losing their employment (889). It is pointed out that the award does not give the additional 15 per cent, on the market value, which is directed by S. 42 of the Land Acquisition Act of 1870 to be paid by the Collector. According to the exact terms of the Act the award is only to ascertain the market value, and then the Act itself imposes a further obligation on the Collector to pay the 15 per cent. The effect is the same whether the award is silent about the added percentage, or expressly includes it (86). Compensation—Apportionment of—Building errected on land by third party and removeable by him at pleasure of owner of land—Compensation to owner of.

Land on which stood trees and structures was acquired under the Land Acquisition Act I of 1894. The structures consisted of a residential house. Plaintiff became owner of the land by reason of a purchase at a sale thereof held under Bengal Act XI of 1859. The ownership of the building on the land did not, however, vest in him by virtue of his purchase, and it continued to vest in the defendants, whose predecessor in interest had put up the building. The total amount of the award made in respect of the holding acquired was Rs. 14,569. The sum awarded in respect of the land and trees, and the additional compensation under S. 23, Sub-S. 2, was Rs. 2,181 and the amount in respect of "Structures" and the additional compensation was Rs. 12,388.

Held that, in assessing what portion of the compensation money awarded in respect of the house should be paid to the defendants, it was necessary to consider what would have been the position and the respective rights of the parties after the sale, if no acquisition had taken place under the Land Acquisition Act; and that the following matters must be taken into consideration:—

After the sale the plaintiff would have been the owner of the land and the defendants would have been the owners of the house. The plaintiff would have had the right to call upon the defendants to remove the house. If the defendant did remove the house, the value to them would be small, and in the ordinary course would be no more than what has been called "demolition value"—namely, the value of the materials less the cost of removal; and if the defendants did not remove the house they would lose it.

There is, however, the possibility that (if the land had not been acquired under the Land Acquisition Act) the owner of the land would not have desired or required the removal of the house, and he might have been willing to pay to the defendants, the owners of the house, more than the mere demolition value of the house. In other words, the owner of the land would be a possible purchaser, who might be willing to give more for the house than any one else, as he was the owner of the land.

It is also to be remembered and taken into consideration that if the defendants were called upon to remove the house they would be entitled to a reasonable time for such removal and that during such time the plaintiff would be kept out of enjoyment of the land (225-6). In the case of a land compulsarily acquired by Government for public purposes (as, for instance, under the Land Acquisition Act) the prima facie title to the compensation money is with the person in whose exclusive use and occupation the land was at the time when it was taken by the Government and the onus lies upon a third party claiming such compensation money to establish that he had a better title. ## LAND ACQUISITION ACT (I OF 1894)-(Contd.)

The view that an order under S. 32 of the Land Acquisition Act of 1894 may appropirately be deemed as an integral part of the award made by the court is based upon a misapprehension as to the meaning of the award. The award as constituted by statute is nothing but an award which states the area of the land, the compensation to be allowed and the apportionment among the persons interested in the land of whose claims the Collector has information, meaning thereby people whose interests are not in dispute, but from the moment wher the sum has been deposited in Court under S. 31, Sub.-S. 2 the functions of the award have ceased; and all that is left is a dispute between interested people as to the extent of their interest. Such dispute forms no part of the award, and it would indeed be strange if a controversy between two people as to the nature of their respective interests in a piece of land should enjoy certain rights of appeal which would be wholly taken away when the piece of land was represented by a sum of money paid into Court (137). - 3. 40-Enquiry under-Notice of, to owner of land -Necessity-Omission to give-Effect-Theory of section.

The general scheme of the Land Acquisition Act of 1894 is this: There is, first, to be an inquiry by a Government Officer into the questions—(1) Whether the proposed acquisition is needed for the construction of some work, and (2) whether such work is likely to prove useful to the public.

The objection of the appellant, the owner of the lands acquired under the Act, is to the procedure under the first inquiry, and his contention is that he ought to have received, and did not receive, notice of that inquiry, and that it was conducted behind his back.

The section prescribing that inquiry is S. 40. Now, upon the face of this enactment, there is no provision requiring or implying the presence or the knowledge of the owner of the land. The theory of the section would seem to be that the Government, through its officer, is to direct its attention to public interests, and it is significant that neither promoter on the one hand, nor possible objector on the other, is mentioned in the section. This does not imply that the officer is to disregard the existence of adverse rights, and the word "needed" implies thiz. But the standpoint is that of public interest, and the Government is given control of the inquiry, for this is all that is meant by his being empowered to appoint time and place; and all this derives the more significance from the fact that the Act, both in this stage and in the subsequent inquiry into value, takes the initiative out of the hands of the promotor and puts it in the hands of the Government (98.9).

That the nature of the first inquiry is no sense litigious and that the owners of the land are purposely ignored, as parties, is strongly shown by the anxious provisions made as regards the second inquiry, for which (S. 9) "public notice" is to be given calling for claims for compensation and requiring all persons interested in the land to appear at a time and place specified (99).

The appellant's objections to the first inpuiry are, therefore, ill-founded (100). (Lord Robertson). EZRA v. SECRE-TARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL.

——S. 54—Dispute as to compensation money raising question of title to land—Decision of—Res-jadicata in civil suit as regards title to the land.

A ghatwal of a large estate sued to eject the defendants from a subordinate tenure within the ambit of his ghatwali estate, claiming the right to resume that tenure at will. The defendants claimed to hold a ghatwali tenure, from which they could not be dispossessed on the payment of a fixed rent.

The plaintiff's father had, during his lifetime, brought a suit against the husband of the defendants, claiming against him the whole of the compensation money which had been paid into Court by the Fast India Railway Co. in respect of land included in the suit subordinate tenure, which had been taken by the Company, the defendants' husband claiming a share in that money. Pending that suit, the defendants' husband died, and the defendants were substituted for him. In that suit a decree was passed in appeal in favour of the plaintiff's father awarding to him the whole of the compensation money on the ground that the defendants' husband had no valid right to any portion of the lands taken and was merely a tenant at will.

Held, that the decision in the prior suit was res judicata in plaintiffs' favour under S. 13 of C. P. C. of 1877 (196).

The very question in this cause, viz., whether the defendants held a permanent tenure, or whether the plaintiff was entitled to resume it at pleasure was directly and substantially in issue between the parties, and has been finally decided between them (196). The usual proceedings for determining the amount of compensation took place, and no dispute arose as to the award, but a question did arise as between the adopted son of R and T as to the character and extent of the estate that she took under the deed of settlement. If she took absolutely, the money could be divided forthwith; but if she took a limited interest, her share would have to be invested. The dispute was, under S.31, sub-S. -The Land Acquisition Amending Act of 1921 declares awards under the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, to be decrees, so as to bring them within the general rules as to appeals to this Board, but it does not prescribe any special mode, in which they are to be treated. This Board has found it necessary to limit the extent of the inquiry, in order to save the parties costly and fruitless litigation. Just as in cases where there are concurrent findings of fact in the Indian Courts, it has long been the general rule of the Board not to allow such findings to be re-opened here, so it has now been settled that this Board will not review the decree of an Indian Appellate Court merely upon questions of value. Where their Lordships have neither the materials nor the experience on which to found an opinion of their own, in a matter where the opinions of competent Courts in India differ (and a fortiers where they concur) it is not their practice to interfere, as an appellate tribunal, unless there appears to be error in law or miscarriage of justice. RIGHT OF, BEFORE AMENDING ACT OF 1921.

A special and limited appeal is given by the Land Acquisition Act of 1894 from the award of "the Court" to the High Court. No further right of appeal is given. Nor can any such right be implied.

In proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act of 1894, the Collector, who made his award, referred the matter to the Court under the provisions of the Act at the instance of the appellants. Two Judges of the Chief Court of Lower Burma sat as "the Court" and also as the High Court to which an appeal is given by the Act from the award of "the Court", and dismissed the reference.

Held, that an appeal to the Privy Council as of right from the award of the Chief Court was incompetent.

The contention that when once the claimant is admitted to the High Court he has all the rights of an ordinary suitor, including the right to carry an award made in an arbitration as to the value of land taken for public purposes up to the Privy Council as if it were a decree of the High Court made in the course of its ordinary jurisdiction held to be note about

In an ex parte petition for special leave appeal to His Majesty in Council from a judgment of the High Court of Bombay delivered under S. 54 of the Land Acquisition Act varying the judicial assessment of the Court below, the point was whether an appeal lay under clause 39 of the Letters l'atent in non-appealable cases under the Land Acquistion Act. The case of Rangeon Botatoung Co. v. The Collector of Rangeon, which had decided that no appeal lay from the High Court in a land acquisition case, was sought to be distinguished on the ground that in that case the appeal was from the Chief Court of Bombay and there was no provision similar to clause 39 of the Letters Patent applicable to the case. Their Lordships observed that the ground of the decision in that case was that the decision in a land acquisition case was an award and not an ordinary decree of the Court and refused special leave to appeal. - Dispute as to compensation money raising question of title to land-Decision of Appeal from.

Under the Land Acquisition Act there are two perfectly separate and distinct forms of procedure contemplated. The first is that necessary for fixing the amount of the compen sation and this is described as being an award. an appeal from that award or of any part of the award is given to the High Court. The case in L. R. 39 I. A. 197 decided that in those circumstances the appeal so given was the only one open to the parties, and that even if appealed against, the award still retained its characteristics and was incapable of further appeal. The argument which succeeded in that case emphasizes the distinction between an award and a decree, and the judgment mentions this in terms by stating that the appellants, although admitted to the High Court, could not have the right to vary an award made under an arbitration as to the value of land taken for public purposes up to this Board as if it were a decree of the High Court made in course of its original jurisdiction. ther this judgment nor any other judgment of this Board affects the question of an appeal on the totally different procoedings that arise when there is a dispute as between the persons claiming compensation involving a difficult question of title. When once the award as to the amount has become final, all questions as to fixing of compensation are then at an end; the duty of the Collector in case of dispute as to the relative rights of the persons together entitled to the money is to place the money under the control of the Court, and the parties then can proceed to litigate in the ordinary way to determine what their right and title to the property may be (136-7). #### Adverse Possession.

-Higher right-Acquisition by tenant of-Assertion of such right in judicial proceeding without any judicial determination thereof-Possession and payment of rent continued as before - Effect.

The simple assertion of a proprietary right in a judicial proceeding connected with the land in dispute which ex hypothesi was unfounded at the date when it was made, cannot by the mere lapse of six or twelve years, convert what was an occupancy or tenant-title into that of an underproprietor. Their Lordships are unable to affirm as a general proposition of law that a person who is, in fact, in possession of land under a tenancy or occupancy title can, by a mere assertion in a judicial proceeding and the lapse of six or twelve years without that assertion having been successfully challenged, obtain a title as an under-proprietor to the lands. Such a judgment might have very far-reaching results and would almost certainly lead to a flood of litigation. It is notorious that in actions for rent or enhancement of rent or for ejectment the persons in possession are prone to maintain rights which they do not possess, and if for any reason no judicial determination is arrived at, but the parties continue on the original footing, the mere lapse of so short a period as six or 12 years (which might be amply explained on other grounds) would deprive the landlord of his proprietary rights unless in the meantime he had brought a declaratory suit to settle once and for all the terms on which possession was held. The case might be different if, in addition to the judicial assertion by the tenant there had been any change in the money payment which he thereafter made to his landlord. The plaintiffs took from the Government i/aras of such land and accretion and thereby elected and agreed to hold the same, not as part of their Zemindartes, but as a part of the khas mehals of the Government, and to pay the jummas reserved by the sparas on that footing. The Government thus held possession continuously for more than 12 years. Held, that a suit brought thereafter by the plaintiffs for the recovery of such land from the Government was barred by limitation.

It may at first sight seem singular that parties should be barred by lapse of time during which they were in physical possession and estopped from disputing the title of the Government. The plaintiff alleged that he did cause such a measurement to be made in 1875 on notice to the defendants, that as a result of that measurement the defendants were found to be in possession of a certain extent of accreted land, and that as they had not given a separate "daul kabuliyat" for the same, it had, under the agreement between the parties,

It was found that the measurement had been made on notice to the defendants, and bona fide, but that it was incorrectly made

The High Court held that although the measurement of the plaintiff was in some material respects defective and wrong, nevertheless the conduct of the defendants was such that they must be deemed to have been in default in not filing a daul kabuliyat, as they ought to have done; and that they, having made no objection at the time, or indeed until the action was brought, to the measurements of the plaintiff, could not then be allowed to defeat his action on the ground of the measurement being defective.

Their Lordships affirmed this judgment.

The defendants were in default; the plaintiff baving made a measurement which is not impeached on the ground of fraud-if it had been, the case would have been different -last a bona fide measurement, in pursuance, as he believed and intended, of the agreement between the parties, it was the duty of the defendants, if they objected to it, to have stated their objection; but they having made no objection at the time, or indeed until the action was brought, it is to late for them to say that he had no cause of action, although they are entitled to ask the Court to decide what the amount of property is which the plaintiff is entitled to recover. -Measurement and settlement of excess land and extcution of kabuliyat in respect thereof-Provision for-Landlord's right in case of.

A kaladiyat, dated 23rd April, 1850, executed by the then tenants, under a howaldari tenure, of certain lands comprised in " the chur so the estate of M." forming part of the Zemindary belonging to the respondent, contained the following stipulations :-

If a new chur accretes contiguous to the aforesaid howala and as hakiat of the aforesaid (torn), and no revenue is assessed thereon by the Government, then, when the said char becomes fit for cultivation, a fresh measurement shall be made of the land of the said chur and of the aforesaid howla; and, after a deduction of the aforesaid 13.6-16 gundahs of land, we shall pay rent at the rate of Rs. 27-7 for the excess of land up to five drones, and at the sard (prevailing) pergunnah rates for lands exceeding that quantity. If we fail to do so, the rent will be realised according to the law for the realisation of rent, with interest on lapsed instalments according to the demands of the town of the said pergunnah; or at the close of the year, you will serve on the spot, and on some conspicuous place in the mahakuma (bead-quarters) of any hakim, an itlanama (notice) to our address, requiring us to take a settlement of the said excess land, and to file a kabuliyat, and fixing the time at fifteen days; if, thereupon, we do not appear before you and take a settlement and fix a kabuliyat, you will settle the said excess land with others."

Held that, under the terms of the kabuliyat, the proprietor was not precluded from bringing his suit for (1) a measurement of the excess land and delivery to him of khas possession thereof, or (2) assessment of the rent of the excess land payable under the kabuliyat, without taking any preliminary step, in order to have an authentic measurement

Measurement and settlement of excess land and exccution of new kabuliyat in respect thereof-Provision for-Tenant's failure to take settlement and to execute mes kabuliyat-Landlord's suit for khas possession of needy accreted chur-Maintainability-Measurement of new chur by landlord with and without due notice to temant-Cases of-Distinction.

A kabuliyat, dated 23rd April, 1850, executed by their tenants, under a howaldari tenure, of certain lands comprised in "the chur to the east of M," forming part of the Zemindary belonging to the respondent, contained the following stipulations :-

"If a new chur accretes contiguous to the aforesaid howla, and as kakiat of the aforesaid (torn), and no revenue is assessed thereon by the Government, then, when the said chur becomes fit for cultivation, a fresh measurement shall be made of the land of the said chur and of the aforesaid 13 6-16 gundahs of land, we shall pay rent at the rate of Rs. 2-7-7 for the excess of land up to five drones, and at the sara (prevailing) pergunnah rates for lands exceeding that quantity. If we fail to do so, the rent will be realised according to the law for the realisation of rent, with interest on lapsed instalments according to the demands of the towai of the said pergunnah; or at the close of the year, you will serve on the spot, and on some conspicuous place in the mahakuma (headquarters) of any hakim, an itlanama (notice) to our address, requiring us to take a settlement of the said excess land, and to file a kabuliyat, and fixing the time at fifteen days; if, thereupon, we do not appear before you and take a settlement and fix a kabuliyat, you will settle the said excess lands with others."

At the commencement of the year 1876, a new chur accreted to the howla in question, which was to a large extent composed of land fit for cultivation, The respondent alleged that, in April of that year, a new measurement of the original howla and of the accreted chur was made by his servants under his instructions. The measurement was made without intimation to the appellants, the registered tenants of the howla, and in their absence. The respondent thereafter, on 28th March, 1878, caused a notice to be served on the appellants setting forth the fact of measurement, intimating the precise amount of the increased rent due in respect of the excess land, according to the rates specified in the kabuliyat, and requiring the appellants to appear, either before himself or his principal officer, within fifteen days from service, "and file a kabuliyat for the said quantity of land and for the said amount of rent; otherwise after the expiry of the said fixed period, under the terms of the said kabuliyat, I shall take khas possession of the land in excess of the said Dr. 16-2-9 gandahs of land, for the purpose of settling the same with others.

The appellants paid no attention to the notice, and thereupon the respondent instituted the suit out of which the appeal arose, praying (1) that the Court should direct a measurement of the excess land and give him khas possession thereof; or otherwise, (2) that the Court should, in the event of its declining to give him possession, assess the rent of the excess land payable under the kabuliyat.

Held, that the measurement of 1876, without intimation to the appellants, coupled with the peculiar terms of the notice of March, 1878, was not per se sufficient to entitle the respondent to insist on his claim for khas possession of the excess land, as ascertained by the Court; but that he was entitled to have a decree fixing the extent of the excess land, and assessing the rent payable for it, in terms of the kalsuliyat of 1850. On ascertainment of the precise extent of excess land for which rent was payable, and also the precise amount of the increased rent, it would be in the option of the respondent, either to realise the rents in terms of law, or to serve a fresh notice in terms of the kabuliyat of 1850; and, if the appellants did not come in and make a settlement and file a new kabuliyat, he would then be entitled to khas possession of the excess land which had accreted to the original howla (121-2).

If the respondent had given the appellants full notice of his intention to make a new measurement, so as to enable them to be present, if they saw fit, at the time it was made, that would have cast upon them the duty of appearing before him within fifteen days after the notice was served; and if they had failed to appear within that period, the Court, if satisfied that the measurement was made in good faith, would probably have held them precluded by their own laches from objecting to it. But the respondent gave them no intimation of his intention to measure; and, in the notice which he served, he did not require them, in terms of the kabuliyat of 1850, "to take a settlement of the excess land, 'and to file a kabuliyat,' but called upon them within 15 days to "file a kabuliyat for the said quantity of land, and for the said amount of rent." The difference between these two requisitions is not one of form merely, but of substance. What the deed of 1850 contemplates is that after a measurement has been made, within the knowledge of the tenants, and to which they ought therefore to be prepared to state specific objections, they may be required to come in and say whether they are or are not willing and ready to take a lease of the excess land. It does not contemplate that the new kabuliyat must of necessity be executed within the fifteen days. It is obvious that, after the tenants have come in, and have agreed to take a lease of the excess land, they and the proprietor may differ both as to the precise extent of the land and as to the rent to be paid for it; and in that case their difference must be settled by the Court (120). -Rent payable for excess land-Rate of-Pergunnah rates- No evidence of-Effect.

A kabuliyat, dated 23rd April, 1850, executed by the then tenants, under a howaldari tenure of certain lands comprised in "the chur to the east of M," forming part of the semindary belonging to the respondent, contained the following stipulations :-

"If a new chur accretes contiguous to the aforesaid howla, and as hakiat of the aforesaid (torn), and no revenue is assessed thereon by the Government, then, when the said chur becomes fit for cultivation, a fresh measurement shall be made of the land of the said chur and of the aforesaid howla; and, after a deduction of the aforesaid 13-6-16 gundahs of land, we shall pay rent at the rate of Rs. 2-7-7 for the excess of land up to five dropes, and at the sara (prevailing) pergunnah rates for land exceeding that quantity. If you fail to do so, the rent will be realised according to the law for the realisation of rent, with interest on lapsed instalments according to the demands of the towzi of the said pergunnah; or at the close of the year, you will serve on the spot, and on some conspicuous place in the mahakuma (headquarters) of any hakim, an itlanama (notice) to our address, requiring us to take a settlement of the said excess land, and to file a kabuliyat, and fixing the time at fifteen days; if, thereupon, we do not appear before you and take a settlement and fix a kabuliyat, you will settle the said excess lands with others.

At the commencement of the year 1870, a new chur accreted to the howla in question, which was to a large extent composed of land fit for cultivation. The respondent alleged that, in April of that year, a new measurement of the original howle and of the accreted chur was made by his servants under his instructions. The measurement was made without intimation to the appellants, the registered tenants of the howla, and in their absence. The respondent thereafter caused to be served on the oppellants a notice thereof, and of the increased rent demanded, requiring them to appear within fifteen days and file a kabaliyat for the said amount of land and rent, or that he would take khas possession. The appellants paid no attention to the notice, and thereupon the respondent commenced the suit out of which the appeal arose, praying (1) that the Court should direct a measurement of the excess land and give him khas possession thereof; or otherwise, (2) that the Court should, in the event of its declining to give him possession, assess the rent of the excess land payable under the kabuliyat.

The Sub-Judge found on measurement that a certain quantity of land had accreted, but dismissed the suit, even as regards the prayer for assessment of the rent of the excess land on the ground that the respondent had failed to prove pergunnals rates.

The evidence on both sides clearly showed that there was not at the date of suit, and probably never was, any such thing as a fixed scale of rents for lands like those within the pergunnah.

Held, differing from the Sub-Judge, that that circum stance did not warrant the conclusion that no pergunnah rate had been proved, but that it led to the inference that the parties to the kabuliyat must have contemplated payment of a fair rent, to be computed according to the average of rents paid by the tenants of similar lands within the pergunnah, due regard being had to the nature of the tenure (120-1.) The dowl kabuliat executed by a putnidar in respect of a patni tenure situated within the appellants' Zemindari contained the following covenant: "If the land be found to be more on measurement by nat prevalent according to the custom of the pargana, I shall separately pay the rent thereof at this rate; if it be found to be less, I shall get remission therefor." The reason for the approximate The reason for the approximate statement of the area and the particular provision regarding the variation of the rent in certain probabilities was due to the fact that a strong tidal river flowed close to the boundaries of the patni taluq.

Subsequent to the lease additional land was found upon measurement to be in the patnidar's possession and the Zemindars obtained a decree in the Revenue Courts for increased rent on that ground. Later, considerable parts of the lands having been washed away by the action of the river, the patnidars obtained, under the provisions of S. 19 of the Bengal Act VIII of 1869, a proportionate remission of rent. On the diluviated lands re-appearing and admittedly re-forming in situ, held, that the patnidars had not abandoned their rights to such lands on their re-formation in situ, and that the Zemindars were entitled to rent, but not to khas possession, in respect thereof. There is nothing to show that, by claiming or accepting remission of rent in respect of lands washed away from time to time by the action of the river, the patnidars abandoned, or agreed to abandon, their rights to such lands on their re-formation in ritu. The diluviated lands formed part of a permanent, heritable, and transferable tenure; until it can be established that the holder of the tenure has abandoned his right to the submerged lands it remains intact. In a suit in ejectment brought by the plaintiffs against D the High Court, on appeal, held that D was a raiyat of the suit lands, and dismissed the suit on the ground that no notice to quit had been given to him as required by the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885. Plaintiffs appealed from that decree to the Privy Council. Pending that appeal  $D_2$ interest in the said lands was sold to M and C, and a notice of such sale was served upon the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs thereupon applied to have M and C added as respondents in the Privy Council appeal, their application for the purpose, however, expressly stating that they did not admit the validity of the sale to M and C. M and C were accordingly added as respondents to the Privy Council appeal, and in that appeal the decree of the High Court was eventually affirmed.

Held, reversing the courts below, that the plaintiffs were not, by reason of their having filed the position to have M and C added as respondents, estopped from contesting the validity of the sale to them (727).

M and C were obviously added with the object of further litigation after the determination of the Privy Council appeal being, if possible, avoided. The mere erection by a tenant of permanent structures upon the land let to him, in the knowledge of and without interference by his lessor, will not suffice to estop him in equity from suing to eject the tenant. To raise a plea of equitable estoppel, the tenant must show that the conduct of the owner, whether consisting in abstinence from interfering or in active intervention, was sufficient to justify the legal inference that the parties had by plain implication contracted that the right of tenancy under which the tenant originally obtained possession of the land should be changed into a perpetual right of occupation. The then agent of the lessors wrote a letter to the lessee in which he stated that the registered lease was a permanent lease, and that under it the lessee was entitled to erect buildings, as the lease distinctly stated, but that there was no fixity of rent. On the faith of that letter the lessee erected permanent buildings upon the demised land. Rule as to-Applicability of to leases from year to

The reason why a tenant from year to year may, when he has denied his landlord's title, he ejected without notice, is not because the denial or disclaimer works a forfeiture. The holding being from year to year subject to the mutual will of landlord and tenant to determine it on giving the usual six months' notice, evidence of a disclaimer is evidence of an election to put an end to the tenancy and supersede the necessity for such notice. The question was whether or not an ikrar was inadmissible for want of registration. The District Judge held that it was inadmissible, because it operated to create or declare an interest, and came under clause (b) of S. 17 of the Registration Act III of 1877.

The terms of the document were that the tenants conjointly promised that they would sign and have registered kalsulyats in respect of rents at the rates mentioned for the old lands which they had, and for the excess land, if any was found on measurement.

Midd that the ikrar did not come under clause (b), but under clause (b) of S. 17, as a document merely creating a tight to obtain another document, which would, when executed, create or declare an interest (238). Kabuliyat-(Contd.)

kabuliyat after the agreement to pay the rent contained these words: "If you (the plaintiff) or your heirs require the land you and they will take khas possession of it. I (the tenant) and my heirs shall never have occupancy right to the said lands;" and towards the end a clause that if the rent was unpaid the tenants should at the pleasure of the plaintiff and of his heirs be ejected from the land, and it should be his and his heirs' khas property.

The tenants objected to the condition that khas possesssion might be taken at will; but they were told that the condition was inserted not with a view to its being enforced but merely with the object of inducing the tenants to remain under the influence of the Zemindar. Similarly with reference to the clause empowering the landlord to take khas possession if rent were not paid by the end of the year. It appeared that the landlord represented that clause to be a penalty clause and that the law was to that effect. The statement of the effect of the law was admittedly a misrepresentation.

Held that the kabuliyat was not the real agreement between the parties, and that the plaintiff could not suc upon it (238).

Where one party induces the other to contract on the faith of representations made to him, any one of which is untrue, the whole contract is, in a Court of Equity, considered as having been obtained fraudulently. If such a representation had not been made, the tenants might have refused to sign the kabuliyat. Further, if there is any stipulation in the kabuliyat which the plaintiff told the tenants would not be enforced, they cannot be held to have assented to it, and the kabuliyat is not the real agreement between the parties (237-8). -Rival landlords-Property in possession of tenant-Claims to-Suit by one landlord against another for declaration of title-Maintainability-Specific Relief Act, S. 42.

Under the Bengal Land Registration Act (VII of 1876) registration of ownership was refused on the application of two rival purchasers of the same property, and a reference concerning them was made to the High Court under S, 55. One purchaser then sued the other claiming a decree declaratory of his title, under conveyances made to him in 1890 by a Mahomedan widow, since deceased, and ly assignees and lessees from her of parts of her interest in the property. He alleged that a hibs-bil-cauz, executed by her in 1858 to her son-in-law for no substantial consideration, was nothing more than a benami transfer, after which she had remained the owner with her tormer title. On that hiba, however, the defence was founded, the defendant averring that it was a real conveyance by the widow, and that through the son-in-law, from whose sons the defendant had purchased the property, the latter had obtained a good title. Neither party was or had ever been in actual physical possession of any part of the property, which had been let to tenants. An objection taken to the form of the -Rival landlords-Suit by one of, against tenant in possession under Magistrate's order-Decision in, of title of rival claimants-Propriety-Other landlord impleaded in suit and question of title fully fought out-Effect.

The lands, which were the subject of the suit, were three separate holdings forming part of the Government Khas Mehals in the Twenty-Foor Pergunnahs. The appellant claimed the suit lands under a purchase thereof by his assignor under a sale held under Pengal Regulation XI of 1796. A was the registered tenant of the lands, and the sale was held in pursuance of proceedings taken against him under the said Regulation. The respondents insisted that d was a member of a joint Hindu family of which they were the other members, that the lands in suit were joint family property, and that the sale relied upon did not affect their interests in them. One G claimed to be a lesses of the suit lands under a lease granted by A and the re-pundents, and, owing to a dispute between G and the appellant's assignor, a Magistrate's order was possed declaring G to be in possession of the suit lands, and directing appellant's assigner to a civil suit.

Appellant, who obtained a transfer of his assignor's interest, thereupon instituted a suit for possession of the suit londs. The suit was originally instituted against G only. By supplemented plaint the respondents were made parties to it. The issues settled in the case related to the bona fide nature of the lease set up by G and to appellant's title to respondent's share of the suit lands. The trial Judge held that the lease was merely colorable and that the appellant was, as between him and G, entitled to possession, He further held that the question of title between appelbut and respendents could not be properly tried in the suit, and that respondent's remedy was to sue to set aside the sale to the extent of their interest, making the Government a party to the suit. G and the respondents appealed against that decision, but the former died pending his appeal, which, not having been reviewed, was struck off. The appellate Court overruled the objection that the suit had come to an end with the lessee's interest, on the ground that there was a distinct issue of title joined between appellant and respondents and made a decree in their favour, reducing the interest of the appellant in the lands to the fractional share of A.

Held, that the appellate Court was right in determining the question of title between the appellants and the respondents and that its decree was correct.

The appellant had by supplemental plaint made the respundents parties to the suit, though under a kind of protest that it was unnecessary to do so; and this issue of title had been raised and joined between them. The only difficulty in the case is, that the lease of G, who was put forward as he tenant in possession, has been pronounced by the trial Judge to be simply colorable, and that the appellate Court has not dealt with his finding on that point. Considering, however, that as between G and the respondents the lease constituted the relation of landlords and tenant, and that the intervention of the landlords to defend rested on privity of title; and further, that the effect of the proceedings in the Magistrate's Court was to determine that the appellant was out of possession, and to cast upon him the burden of recovering possession by proof of a good title, and that he has failed to do so except to the extent admitted by the appellate Court, their Lordships think that the decree

Tenant-Allegation of right to certain tenure by-Declaration of title free trom-Sait for-Maintainali-lity-Consequential relief-Landlord not entitled to any -Specific Relief Act, S. 42, Held that a suit by a Zemindar against a number of his ryots for a declaration of his mal title by setting aside the false bromuttur title alleged by the defendants was not maintainable by virtue of the provisions of S. 15 of Civil Procedure Code of 1859.

The suit is one to set aside, not any deed nor any act, but a mere allegation of the defendants that they had a certain tenure. The Zenandar was not entitled to relief in the shape of an order giving him possession, inasmuch as he was in receipt of the rents and profits, and he sought for and could obtain no other description of possession than that which he had. He could not obtain relief by an order directing an enhancement of rent, inasmuch as the cognizance of suits for the enhancement of rent is confined to the Revenue Courts, and a certain procedure is assigned to claims of that kind in those Courts. The declaration sought for by him is really no more than this, that he should have his title, whatever it was as a Zemindar, free from the allegation of the defendants that they had some other title. He cannot obtain relief in the shape of merely setting aside an assertion, an assertion which may have been merely by word of mouth. No relief could, therefore, have been granted to the plaintiff even if he had prayed for it. (Sir Robert P. Collier.) RAJAH NILMONY SINGH P. KALLY CHURN BATTACHARJEE, (1874) 2 I. A. 83 = 14 B. L. A notice to quit was served upon them, which distinctly stated that the land of which possession was required was the land standing in the name of Nidhi Ram, bearing the yearly jamma of Rs. 25, and for which the appellants had been paying rent and taking receipts. The boundaries of the land given in the notice to quit covered the entire area held by the appellants. In the schedule to the notice, however, there was a mistatement as to the area of the land of which possession was demanded, the extent being stated to be less than it really was,

The Maharajah of Darbhanga sued the Government of India for possession of a village of which the latter had been in possession since 1798. During the whole of that time, and for long before, the village was admittedly part of the milkiat, that is, of the Zemindary or proprietary estate of the Durbhanga Raj. The Government had made to the Rajah, in some shape or other, either as a matter of account or as a matter of actual payment, one uniform payment for 80 years before the dispute arose, and they claimed to be perpetual tenants at fixed rent. They contended that the true inference from the facts was that there was a binding agreement for a perpetual tenancy by them under the Darbhanga Raj and that otherwise the Rajah would not have gone on for such a number of years accepting a payment which had come to be very far below the value of the land, unless he was bound by an agreement of that kind.

Held that, being admitted by tenants of the Darbhanga Raja, the Government had to shew why the landlord might not recover his property; and they could only do that by proving that there was some agreement between them and their landlord that they should have something more than the ordinary tenancy at will from year to year (11).

It is not the business of the plaintiff to explain the possession; it is the business of the defendants to shew that it leads to the inference of a perpetual tenancy (11). (Lord Hobbouse.) SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA 2. MAHA-RAJAH LUCHMESWAR SINGH, Possession explicable in other ways.

In an action of ejectment brought by a landlord against his tenant it appeared that the latter had admittedly been in possession of the suit land for a period of 80 years at a uniform rate of payment which was very far below the value of the land. The tenant contended that the true inference from the facts was that there was a binding agreement for a perpetual tenancy between him and the landlord.

Held, that there would be strength in the argument if the origin of those things could not be found out, but that the argument lost its force as the origin was known and as the possession was not difficult to explain in other ways (11). To create a new and fixed rent for all time, though adequate at the time, in lieu of giving the endowment the benefit of an augmentation of a variable rent from time to time, would be a breach of duty in a shebait and is not therefore presumable. PROOF OF.

Acknowledgment of such tenure by landlord-Estoppel against him by reason of.

The respondent's predecessors in title were invited by the appellant's precedessors about 1859 to occupy for building purposes land in a suburb of Delhi. No document showing the terms of the occupancy was extant nor was there any reliable oral testimony of what passed at the time. But it has found that from 1859 onwards a uniform rent had been paid, that in some of the receipts given by the landlord the word "permanent" was applied to the rent paid, that the tenants had erected substantial buildings without objection by the landlord, that they had sold and mortgaged part of the properties, and that the properties had passed by succession:—

Held that a finding that the tenancy was permanent at a fixed rent was justified, and that its validity was not affected by the fact that there was no permanent settlement in the Punjah.

In a suit brought by the appellant against the respondents to recover possession of the land, and for a declaration that the respondents were tenants at will.

Held that the courts below were justified in finding that the tenancy was a permanent tenancy at a fixed rent and that, there being nothing to show that a permanent tenancy was a legal impossibility in the Punjab, the validity of the finding was not affected by the fact that there was no permanent settlement in the Punjab.

An inference as to a fact to be drawn from facts depends on a mental process which is the same all the world over.

In the above case several sale-deeds of superstructure houses on the suit plot by the plaintiff's predecessors were produced in which there was a distinct acknowledgment that the houses themselves were held by the tenant in virtue of a permanent tenancy.

Held that that would be an estoppel against the plaintiffs.

PROOF OF-(Contd.)

-Evidence insufficient for.

The question was whether a tenancy of land created in or about the year 1871 was a permanent tenanty or a mere tenancy at will.

Held, affirming the High Court, that no permanent tenancy had been established (186).

The three outstanding things which deeply impressed their Lordships in arriving at the above conclusion were as

The first was a sale deed of 23 8-1885—the only transaction of the kind that took place-by which the then proprietor of the tenant firm sold the firm's entire interest in the amla then erected on the demised land and in the land itself. The assurance of the amla was absolute, the vendor's covenants for title were unqualified. As to the land, however, the vendees were to be responsible for loss or damage which might be caused to them in case the owner of the land raise ed a dispute or set up a claim against them, the yearder was to have no concern therewith.

Up to March, 1904, the rent paid for the land by the tenants had been Rs. 12-8 per mensem. In January, 1905, the landlord sued the tenants to recover arrears of rent at the enhanced rate of Rs. 25 per mensem; and that suit was decreed. In the written statements filed by the then tenants in that suit, no proper allegation of a permanent tenancy, was, however, set up. The only plea there set up was that the landlord could not eject the tenants so long as the defendants' building on the demised land existed, and an oral agreement at the time of the erection of the said building that the then rent of Rs. 12.8 was not to be enhanced so long as the building to be created was in existence. That was all.

Thirdly, the continued payment of the enhanced rent of Rs. 25 per mensem even since the decree in the 1905 suit. (Lord Blaneshurgh.) DHANNA MAL P. MOTI SAGAR.

-Long possession at uniform rent payment-Transfers by tenant recognised by landlord-Rent received by landlord from transferees.

In a suit by a landlord to eject his tenant, the question was whether the tenant was a mere tenant at will, or whether he had a tenure of a permanent character and was not liable to be evicted at will. It appeared that the tenure or holding, whatever might be its nature, had been in existence for about 80 years, and probably much more, when the suit was instituted, that the rent was an almost nominal one, and had never been enhanced, though the value of the holding, as measured by its sale price, had greatly increased; that it had been sold again and again by kohalas purporting to convey an absolute interest; that it had passed by will; and that the rent had been accepted from the new tenants after such devolu-

Held that from those facts only one inference was possible, namely, that the tenant held a permanent tenure.

The Courts below, however, held that that inference was excluded on two grounds:—(1) two kobalas filed in the case, executed by tenants in possession of the land in favour of their successors, expressly recited that the transferee, on paying the expenses, etc., of the Maharajah Bahadur, and on causing the expunction of the transferor's name, should take a pattah in his name; and (2) the landlord had not been proved to have assented to the several transfers of the holding, and the receipt by him of the rent of the holding from the transferees in their own names was not a sufficient recognition of the transferee as tenant, because the dakhilas acknowledging such receipts did not expressly describe the transferee as tenant of the holding.

Held further, with regard to ground No. 1, that the view of the Courts below as to the effect of taking a new pattah was inconsistent with the elecisions of the Board; and with regard to ground No. 2, that as the dakhilas described the rent paid as the rent of the holding, and the person paying as occupier of the holding, and as paving on his own account, the receipt of rent was quite a sufficient recognition of the transferee as tenant. -Long possession at uniform rent payment-Transfort by tenant recognized by landlord-Mortgage taken by landlord himself from tenant-Rent receipts-Description of tenant as tenant at will in, not brought home to tenant.

In a suit by the plaintiffs to eject the defendants, who had a ryoti holding within the plaintiff's property, the question was whether, as alleged by the plaintiffs, the holding from which he sought to eject the defendants was a mere tenancy at will, or whether it was, as alleged by the defendants, a "maurasi moborrari jama", that is, a permanent, heritable, and transferable jama holding. The District Judge, on appeal, found as a fact upon the evidence that the defendant's holding had existed for a considerable number of years, that it was created somewhere in 1845. that it had been held ever since at a fixed permanent rent, that the heritable, transferable right of the defendants had been recognised by the plaintiffs' predecessor in title; and that the plaintiffs' father himself had taken a mortgage of the holding or part of it on the basis that it was a permanent, transferable, heritable holding. It also appeared that in certain rent receipts granted to the defendants by the plaintiffs or their prodecessor, the words "tenant-at-will" appeared distinctly indicating the character of the tenancy; but there was nothing to show that the defendants or their predecessors consented to the insertion of those words in the rent receipts or that they even knew of it. The District Judge dismissed the suit, holding that the defendants had made out their case.

Held by their Lordships that the facts found by the District Judge justified the inference drawn by him from them, and that the said inference was not relutted by the words "tenant-at-will" in the rent receipts. ## Relation of, between Zemindar and Jotedars— Decree establishing.

-What amounts to-Construction of decree.

The suit lands were admittedly dense jungle until, in 1828, or later, some of the defendants' predecessors began to cultivate them. In 1844, the Revenue authorities, treating them as illam or unsettled lands which were at the disposal of Government not having been included in any permanently settled estate, assessed them to revenue; but the plaintiffs' predecessors succeeded in getting the Revenue Authorities in 1852 to reverse that decision and to recog nise that those lands formed part of their permanently settled estate. The defendants' predecessors, however, preferred the position of raiyats holding directly under Govern ment and were unwilling to be included in the plaintiffs' zemindari. Accordingly, plaintiffs' predecessors instituted in 1854 a suit against defendants' predecessors for possession and mesne profits. The pleadings in that suit showed that the suit was not instituted and was not fought out on the footing that there was any subsisting relation of landlord and tenant between the parties. The Court in that suit held that the lands sued for formed part of the permanently settled estate of the plaintiffs' predecessors and passed a decree, which, after awarding to the then plaintiffs possession and past and future mesne profits of the lands, provided that so long as the then defendants were ready and willing to pay rents legally according to the rates prevailing in the

Held, that the portion of the decree providing for the defendants' predecessors continuing to own their right as jotidars so long as they were ready and willing to pay the rents specified could not be read as establishing the relation of landlord and tenant between the parties, but was to be read as giving the plaintiff a decree for possession with past and future mesne profits, subject to the condition that so long as the defendants were willing to pay rent at the specified rates to the plaintiffs they should not be ousted from their rights as jotedars.

It is clear that under the decree the defendants were only to be entitled to the right of jotedar if they were ready and willing to pay rent to the semindar. (Sir John Wallis.)

APPORTIONMENT OF.

-Indian Law-English Apportionment Act -- Applicability-Older English Lato-Applicability and basis of.

The English Apportionment Act of 1870 provides that after its passing, all rents, annuities, and other periodica payments in the nature of income are, unless it is expressly stipulated that no apportionment is to take place, to be considered as, like interest on money lent, accruing from day to day; and shall be apportionable in respect of time accordingly. But this Act does not apply in India, nor do any of the earlier English Apportionment Acts.

The older English law on the subject is traceable to the two propositions, that an entire contract cannot be apportioned, and that under such an instrument as, for instance, a lease with a reservation of periodically payable rent; the contract for each portion is distinct and entire. The rule, however, while applicable to periodical payments becoming due at fixed intervals, did not apply to sums accruing de die in diem. It did not, for example, apply to annuities or to delets. The distinctions drawn were often fine. But, however clear the principle which governed the character of proprietary and contractual rights, it was always open to a testator or settlor, with full power of disposition, to exclude its practical consequences. He had only to say that it was his intention that the person entitled to the fixed sum, payable only after the determination of the intermediate title, should account to those in whom that intermediate title was vested or their representatives. Such an expression of intention had, at least, the effect of creating a trust in equity, and might, in certain cases, be operative at law by giving a special character to the title to the periodical payments. It had the effect of making the question, in most instances, one merely of construction of the instrument.

Both parties to the appeal conceded that the old law in England applied to a case in which the question was whether there was applicable, under Indian law, any principle of apportionment which applied to rents and periodical payments, such as rents and profits from land, and the dividends and income arising from shares carrying income periodically payable, such as were specified in the schedule to an inter view settlement by a l'arsee. By an interview settlement a Parsee settler conveyed a large amount of property to trustees on trust (interalia) to receive the rents and profits, and, after making certain other payments, to make over the balance of income to the settlor himself during his life. After his death, the trustees were to realise certain sums, and, within thirteen months, after the settlor's death, out of the balance of income from what remained, accraing within the first thirteen months, to pay to bis widow, from time to time and in such sums as she should reasonably require and the state of the income should permit the total sam of Rs. 80,000 for purposes mentioned. The trustees were then to divide the remainder of the balance of such income arising or accruing during the first thirteen months after the settlor's death, amongst his widows. J. and D, in equal shares; the capital and income, after the thirteen months, were, subject to the trusts stated, to go to other beneficiaries under the trust deed as therein provided. The settled property consisted of land and immoveables specified in the first schedule to the deed; shares, bonds, and securities specified in the second; and outstanding debts due to the settlor in the third.

Held that, in the absence of clear and specific directions in the deed of settlement, there could not, as between the settlor and the beneficiaries who took beneficially the income for 13 months after his death and those beneficially entitled to the income subsequently, be any apportionment in regard to the rents and profits from land, and the dividends and income arising from shares carrying income persodically payable, such as were specified in the second schedule to the deed.

The character of payments such as those directed is prima facie discontinuous at common law. No doubt, the settlor could have given directions which would have modified this character, or at least, have deprived it of the consequences arising from its discontinuity. But such directions would have had to be c'ear and unambiguous in order to have had the result of varying the rights defined by the general law. There is no such distinctness in direction in the present deed as would have been required to have this effect. The words " arising or accraing " in the deed in reference to the income are not sufficient for the purpose. (Viscount Haldane.)

-Establishment of title-Suit for both-Misjoinder of causes of action-Suit when not bad for.

The appellant, a zemindar, sued (1) for possession of certain mouzahs, as forming part of his zemindary, (2) to set aside a summary award which upheld the respondent's right under an alleged Bhakee Birt tenure, and (3) to recover arrears of rent under a lease deed and kabooliyat, alleged by him to have been granted to the respondent of the mouzahs in question. The rent secured by the lease and kabooliyat falling into arrear, the appellant had instituted a summary suit against the respondent in the Deputy Collector's Court to recover the arrears due. The respondent denied that he was lessee of the Mouzahs, or had taken any lease, or executed a kabooliyat, and set up a title to the Mouzahs as having for a long time been ancestral, and purchased as Bhasce Birt by his ancestors; and that the acmindar had no right to diminish or enhance the registered jusama. The Deputy Collector being of opinion that the execution of the kabooliyat was doubtful, dismissed the summary suit. Hence the suit.

Held that the suit was not bad for misjoinder of causes of

The question here relates to unity of title, and connection and dependence between the claims of the plaintiff. The plaintiff's title is one; it is his proprietary right as Zemindar. We must look to the plaintiff's admitted title as Zemindar and to the interference with such title by an established tenure of this kind, to learn what is meant by the term "possession". The Mouzahs are part of the plaintiff's Zemindary the plaintiff is the assessed proprietor under the Decennial Settlement. The defendant claims that which would, if established, be a dependent tenure, the Zemindar being his immediate superior in the holding. All the distinct portions of the plaintiff's claim flow from, support, and have relation to and connection with his proprietary title, which prima facic entitles him to the collections. The farming lease supports it, the rent payable under that lease supports it, and the removal of the adverse title would confirm it (448-9).

If a groundless claim to Bhakee Birt tenure were preferred by a person in possession under a title to an inferior right derived from the Zemindar, it would certainly be competent to the Zemindar, if the claim amounted to a repudiation or worked a forfeiture of the existing interest, to sue for the restoration of possession, and the quitting of the claim also, because the limitation of his demand to that of possession would keep alive an adverse claim, and would also multiply suits (449.50). A Zemindar, or landlord, may waive a forfeiture, and may treat a tenancy or interest as continuing which his tenant repudiates, or in respect of which he has incurred a forfeiture. Consequently the mere inclusion of a claim for rent in a suit of this nature cannot make the suit multifarious unless it could be treated as multifarious if it insisted on the repudiation or forfeiture (450). As the Courts in India have the divided jurisdiction of a Court of Law and a Court of Equity substantially united in one Court, a claim for rent in arrear, and a claim to remove clouds on the title to demise raised by the tenant, seem to

K, a sharer in a zeminuary, having been unsuccessful in proceeding against the holder of a sub-tenure to enhance its rent, and doubt having been thrown on his semindari title. brought a suit to establish his right of enhancement.

Held, that the suit was not open to the objection that the plaintiff did not seek consequential relief, because it was necessary for the plaintiff to establish his right to a share in the remindary title in the Civil Court in order that he enight try his claim to enhance in the special forum in which he was compelled by statute to bring an enhancement suit (171).

Held further, that, even if there was a discretion to entertain the suit, it was not unsoundly exercised by the Court below (171).

In his last suit for enhancement of rent, the plaintiff had been unsuccessful on the ground that he had not any remindari right in the suit villages, and he was therefore obliged to come to the civil Court to have that right declared. Issues had been joined in the suit, and, if his suit had been dismissed thereafter, the decree would have been a bar to his right to recover even his proportionate share of the rent (171). -Suit for-Onus on plaintiff in-Quantum of Proof Decree declaring proper rout passed shortly before suit-Effect.

In a suit by the mother of the then Zamindar of a taluk for enhancement of rent, a decree was made in 1821, in terms of a compromise enhancing the rent from Rs.1,600 to Rs. 2,000. A subsequent suit in which rent was claimed at Rs. 3,200, was finally decided in 1862, the compromise being thereby set aside and the liability of the taluk to enhancement finally established. The Ameen's report which fixed the rent payable at Rs. 8,124, was not, however, made until 1869. In a suit to recover rent at Rs. 8,124 for the year 1871-2, the Subordinate Judge gave a decree for a decrease in the amount of cultivable land. On appeal, the High Court gave a judgment which passed by the previous litigation and the decree of 1869. The judges of the High Court ignored the fact that the plaintiff was starting upon the foundation of an enhanced rent which had been found two or three years before the commencement of the suit, and which established a prima facie case of the rent properly payable by the talukdar. They thought the other evidence adduced by plaintiff was insufficient to establish a case for enhanced rent.

Held, by their Lordships, reversing the judgment of the High Court, that even if the case had been rested altogether on a new enquiry into the prevailing rates, the judges of the High Court were not right in peremptorily dismissing from their consideration the whole of the evidence on the part of the plaintiff as of no weight.

The evidence was of that kind which would be naturally given in cases of that description. With regard to the onus of proof in a sait by a Zemindar for enhancement of rent, Regulation VIII of 1793 does not apply an uniform rule to all tenures and rights of occupancy. It may be broadly said that it divides them into two great classes, viz., Talooks within the meaning of its 51st section; and Royalty and other under-tenures for which If it be conceded provision is made by the 49th section. that the law casts upon those who claim the benefit of the latter section the whole burden of proving that their land has been held at a fixed rent for a period commencing at least twelve years before the date of the Decennial Settlement, it is clear that the 51st section is more favourable to the holders of Talooks within its meaning, by imposing upon the Zemindar the burden of showing that he is entitled to raise the rent either by special custom, or by contract, or by reason of certain specified conduct on the part of the Talookdar (201). In every suit for enhancement of rent, the nature of the tenure is a material question, irrespective of the question whether the rent is fixed or variable, since upon the former question depends the extent and nature of the proof which the plaintiff is bound to give (263).

In the present suit (to enhance the rents of certain lands held by the appellants within the Zemindary of which the respondent is the owner of a share) the respondent has come into Court treating the appellants as ryots, having a right of occupancy in certain lands at a variable rent. set up by the appellants was that they were Shikmy Talookdars; that they and their ancestors had become so many years before the Decennial Settlement; and that they held the Talook at a fixed rent. In this state of things, it is obvious that the issue settled by the Principal Sudder Ameen is, viz., "Whether the Mehal in dispute is liable to enhancement or not, is not, sufficiently pointed," because in order to determine not only that issue, but also the mode

The respondent was the Zemindar of Jeypore, which had been permanently settled with his grandfather, in 1803, under Madras Regulation XXV 1802. The deed of permanent property by which the property in the zemindary was then assured to the respondent's grandfather showed on the face of it that the Zemindary then included Pergunnah S, and admittedly a specific sum of money was then assessed upon that pergunnah as part of the Government revenue payable in respect of the whole Zemindary.

The appellant was the holder of 6 taluks, constituting or forming part of Pergunnah S, and the suit out of which the appeal arose was brought by the respondent, as Zemindar, against the appellant, treating him as under-tenant, to enhance the rent of those taluks.

Held that, as it appeared that the Zemindary included the pergunnah in question amongst its mal assets or revenuepaying lands, it lay upon the appellant, as defendant in the suit, to establish the grounds on which he disputed the Zemindar's claim to an enhanced rent (389-90). SUIT FOR-KABULIYAT UNENFORCEABLE-SUIT ON 1 OOT OF-KABULIYAT NOT REFERRED TO IN PLAINT AND NOT INTENDED TO BE FINAL AGREEMENT-DECREE ON FOOT OF.

Propriety.

Plaintiff-appellant, a Zemindar, sued his tenants to recover rents, cesses and interest to the amount of Rs. 1,640. Thesuit was founded upon a registered kabuliyat, dated 21-6-1881, executed by the 1st defendant, R, for himself and as guardian of three minor defendants (two of whom were the 1st and 2nd respondents). The Subordinate Judge held that "the terms were so extortionate and hard', and that there was such a surrender by R without adequate consideration of all previously acquired rights, and an acceptance in their place of such "an unconscionable bargain", and such apparent want of proper legal advice, that R was not bound by the kabuliyat. He further held that R, whether guardian of manager, had no power to bind the other members of the family as the contract was not for their benefit. He, how ever, admitted in evidence an ikrar or agreement executed on 25-4-1880 by A, the father of the minors and the uncle of R, who died in April or May, 1881, and who was the karta or manager of the family, and by other tenants, by which he said they agreed to pay Rs. 2-12 per bigha. And he made a decree for rent according to the ikrar of 144 bighas, 9 cottahs and odd, considering that the defendants were not proved to be bound by the area mentioned in the plaint. The ikrar was, however, clearly not the kabuliyat described in the plaint, and the evidence of the plaintiff himself shewed that it was not intended to be the final agreement.

Held, that the ikrar could not be sued upon as an agree ment to pay the rent claimed, which the Subordinate Judge held it to be (238). (Sir Richard Couch.) PERTAB CHUNDER GHOSE P. MOHENDRA PURKAIT.

-Agreement creating-Ejectment of tenant-fandlord's right of -- Defences open to tenant.

Disputes arose between the Indian Government and an adjacent proprietor, M. S., respecting a piece of alluvial land gained by accretion, of which M. S. was then in possession. The Indian Government required the land for public improvements. After some correspondence Letween the Government and M. S., an agreement was entered into, by which M. S. undertook to relinquish all claim to the proprietary right, and to rent the land from the Government, upon condition of the latter allowing him to remain in possession until the projected public improvements rendered it necessary for him to vacate the land. Possession was given to Government, M. S. holding the land from the Government at a fixed rent, and undertaking to quit possession at a month's notice. Improvements in the neighbourhood having been made by the Government, and M. S. being dead, notice to quit was served on M. S.'s representatives, who refused to quit on the ground that the improvements were not such public improvements as were contemplated by the correspondence and agreement. In ejectment by the Government, held :-

First, that M. S. was under the agreement, a mere tenant at will.

Second, that ejectment was maintainable by the Government for recovery of the land, and that M. S.'s representatives had no defence at law to the action. (Lord Chelmsford.) SREEMUTTY ANUNDOMOHEY DOSSEE P. DOE DEM THE EAST INDIA CO.

should require additional land for the purpose of carrying out the objects for which the lease was granted, then the lessors would settle as much of the adjoining land with them as might be necessary for the purpose of such requirements (113).

Their Lordships repelled the contention of the plaintiffs, the assignees of the agreement from the lessee, that the intention of the parties was that the lessee or any one to whom he might assign the agreement should be at liberty to take the whole of the mouzah for any purpose whatever, whether for quarrying coal or not (112-3). #### Agreement between lessor and lessee collateral to lease-Registration-Necessity.

-Payment to lessor-Provision in agreement for-Money not charged on immoveable property.

On 4-7-1895 the then Raja of Ramnad executed a reversionary lease of portions of his Zemindary in favour of R. The lease defined the rights and obligations of both parties; a counter-part of the lease was executed; and both lease and counter-part were duly registered.

During the negotiations for the lease it was agreed between the Raja and R that, in consideration of his obtaining the lease, R' should pay to the Raja a sum of Rs 500 a month for a period of ten years from July, 1895. On 9-7-1895, the arrangement with regard to the payment of Rs. 500 a month was put in writing in the form of a letter addressed by R to the Raja. The sum agreed to be paid was not made a charge on any property.

In a suit brought to recover instalments of the sum of Rs. 500 in arrears, it was contended that the agreement for the payment of that sum was void in law as not being in writing registered, and that proof could not be given of the existence of such oral agreement.

Held, over-ruling the contention, that the agreement was not affected by S. 92 of the Evidence Act; and that there was nothing in the Registration Act or in the Transfer of Property Act which required that it should be registered as part of the lease.

The agreement for the payment of Rs. 500 a month for ten years from July, 1895, is in no way inconsistent with the lease of the 4th of that month. Its provisions form no part of the terms of the holding under the lease; their effect will be exhausted some years before the lease takes effect. The payment bargained for is no charge on the property; it is not rent nor recoverable as rent, but a mere personal obligation collateral to the lease. (Sir Arthur Wilson.) SUBRAMANIAM CHETTIAR v. P, the owner of a mouza, granted in January, 1895, a lease of 212 bighas therein to the predecessor in title of the defendants. In April, 1895 he granted another lease of 175 bighas directly to the west, and contiguous to the first plot, to the predecessor in title of the plaintiffs. the leases were registered, and they were clear as to the identification of the plots conveyed thereunder. In 1900 P directed a person to divide the land of the said mouzah (which by that time had been entirely leased to various proprietors) amongst certain persons among whom were the lessees under the leases of January and April 1895. The division made by that person allotted to the lessee under the lease of January, 1895, the predecessor in title of the defendants, a portion of the plot included in the lease granted to the predecessor in title of the plaintiffs. The defendants encroached upon the said portion, and claimed title to the same as against the plaintiffs. There was, however, no evidence that the then lessees of the various plots in the mouzah were informed that the alleged partition made by the said person in 1900 was an arbitrary parcelling out of the land of the mouzah according to the acreages leased without regard to the boundaries prescribed in the leases already granted.

Held that the rights of the parties could not be affected by the said division and that the defendants could not base a title thereon to the portion encroached upon as against the plaintiff's claim based on the registered lease under which they claimed.

In order to affect the rights of the parties by the division set up it would have to be shown that all the then lessees entered into an agreement that the plots so marked out should be substituted for those granted under the respective leases and there is admittedly no evidence of any such agreement or indeed of any agreement at all. -Rent-Lessee's liability for-Effect on-Non-exoneration of-Covenant amounting to - Construction of losse deed.

The material clauses of a lease deed were as follows :-

You" (the lessees) " shall not be competent to transfer this ijara right in any way by gift, sale, etc.; or to surrender it; and if you do so, the same shall not be binding on me. You together with your beirs shall remain bound to pay duly the rent and munafa of this ijara so long as I shall live. I shall be competent all along to recover my fixed munafa from you and your heirs and to that no objection shall be entertained to the effect that you are not in possession of the ijara right or that the same has been transferred or surrendered by you."

'Notwithstanding (the aforesaid provision), if, on account of the intricacies of the law, any transfer made by you becomes in any way binding (on me) then you and your heirs shall remain bound to pay the fixed amount of rent so long as the transferee will not furnish security in proper quantities of immovable properties to be fixed by me for the due payment of the fixed rent and this shall in no way be varied.

Held that, on the true construction of the lease deed, the lessees could not exonerate themselves from the liability on their personal covenant under the lease to pay the rent reserved by transferring their interest thereunder to a third party, and that the fact that notice of the transfer was given to the lessor by the transferee as well as by the transferors did not affect the liability of the lessees.

The proper construction of the provision in the lease that, if the transfer was held to be binding on the lessor the lessees would be bound to pay the rent only so long as the transferee did not furnish security, is that, under the terms of the contract, the lesser would not be bound to recognise any transfer but would be entitled to hold the original lessees liable for the rent, but, if, on account of some legal technicality, it is held that the lessor would be bound to recognise the transferce then there is that provision that even in that case the lessees would be bound to gay the rent unless security is offered. The provision does not mean that whenever the lessees choose to transfer the leasehold interest, the lessor would be bound to fix the security for the due payment of the rent which the transferee would be required to give and the original lessees would be exonerated from their personal liability to pay the rent -Per High Court. S. 23—House—Lessor of, under lease terminable only at option of lessee—Compensation to—Assessment of—Basis of.

A lease made in the year 1887 between the predecessor in title of the appellants and one K' commenced with the recital that K had taken a lease of the house described therein. and that it was necessary for him to secure a house for a long period, with the object of removing the insufficiency of accommodation and confirming the stability of a school and college which had been established thereon. The lease then recited that the lessors were agreeable, according to the lessee's proposals, to keep the house on lease to the lessee as long as he liked. It went on to stipulate for a monthly rental of Rs. 140 and that the lessee should not be entitled to give up the house before he prepared a house of his own for the school, and that the lessors should not be entitled to take hold of the house unless the lessee gave up the same of his own accord. After the execution of that lease, the lessee carried on a school and college for some twenty years and in the year 1907 he executed an indenture of trust by which he conveyed the lease and certain other properties to trustees, in order that they might carry on the college and school. In 1908 the school was removed to another site. The college continued to be carried on for the time being on the site leased. At some date between 1908 and 1910 the land adjoining the property demised was acquired by the trustees, and upon the land so acquired a new building was erected for the use of the college. The land, the subject-matter of the lease of 1887, was thereafter used partly as a hostel for students at the college, partly for superintendent's building. for a dining room, for lavatory accommodation and for a house for the lodge-keeper. That state of affairs continued from 1910 to 1920, the trustees continuing to pay the monthly rent to the lessors. In 1920, by Act XVI of that year, the Indian Legislative Council enacted that the property comprised in the lease should be transferred to and vested in and held by the Governor of Bengal in Council. Some time in that year after the passing of the said Act but before it had actually come into force, the Government determined to acquire the freehold interest in the land.

On a question arising as to the nature of the appellants' interest in the land and the amount of compensation to be paid to them, held that, on the true construction of the lease, the lease was determinable only at the option of the lessee and that the lessors were not entitled to determine it upon the lessee ceasing to carry on a college or school there.

Held further that even otherwise the fact that the physical site of the college buildings was at the date of suit upon adjoining land and that the demised land was being used for purposes of the college other than the actual teaching in a class room would not be such a cessation of the use of the land for the purposes of a college as to entitle the lessors to determine the lease.

Hell also that the High Court was right in holding that the value of the right existing in the lessors of the land was established by capitalizing the monthly rent. (Lord Chancellor.) RAKHAL CHANDRA BASAK v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL.

HEREDITARY INTEREST DURING CONTINUANCE OF LEASE, LEASE BEING TERMINABLE, HOWEVER, AFTER ONE YEAR, BY LESSOR (GOVERNMENT).

In 1788 the Government granted what was called a mokurruri lease to M. The kabuliyat of the lease signed by M was as follows:—" Whereas I have obtained a lease of mouzah T from 1196 Fusli, at a jumma of Sicca Rs.400, I do acknowledge and give in writing that I shall continue to pay the rent of the mouzah aforesaid at the said jumma, year after year, according to the kabuliyat and the kistbundi. If any one establish his Zemindary (proprietary) right in respect of the said mouzah in his own name before the authorities, I shall continue to pay, year after year, to him or his heirs, the 'malikana' (proprietary allowance) thereof at the rate of Rs. 10 per cent. on the jumma aforesaid, in addition to the Government revenue." there was the following clause: " If the present officers of the British Government, or any authority who may come hereafter, do not accept my mokurruri lease to be hereditary, I acknowledge that this kabuliyat is only for one year, thereafter it shall be cancelled."

It appeared that, though the Government had undoubtedly the power to put an end to the lease at the end of one year, they did not in fact do so but allowed the lease to go on without putting an end to it.

Held that, although the lease was not perhaps properly a mokurruri, as practically the Government could enhance the rent, it must be regarded, as long as it went on, as an hereditary lease, a mourussi pottah, and that the interest of the lessee thereunder, during its continuance, was an hereditary interest (226-7). "at an annual uniform jumma of Sicca Rs, 606, without any condition as to calamities, from the beginning of 1215 Fusli to the period of the continuance of my mokurrari." Then it was required that the lessee should cultivate, " and pay into my treasury the sum of Sioca Rs, 606, the rent of the mouzah aforesaid, for the period aforementioned, according to the intalments year after year." Then there was this provision, "If hereafter the authorities desire to make a settlement of the property at that time, he shall pay the jumma thereof separately according to the Government Settlement." It concluded, "Hence these few words are written and given as a pottah to continue during the term of the mokurruri, that it may be of use when required. The annual jumma malguzari, including the malikana, Rs. 606,"

It appeared that the lease by the Government under which C held the lands was an hereditary lease, a mourussi pottah and that his interest under it was an hereditary interest, which was liable to be, but was not in fact, determined by the Government.

Held that, the evident intention of the parties being that the grant should enure during the term of C's interest there was no reason why, upon the construction of the pottah in question, it should be held to be limited to the life of A' (227).

The duration of the term is capable of being definitely ascertained by reference to the interest which the grantor himself has in the property (227). (Sir Montague E Swith.) BABOO LEKHRAJ ROY D. KUNHYA SINGH.

PERMANENT LEASE TERMINABLE ON NON-PAYMENT OF RENT-YEARLY TENANCY.

-The question was whether, on the true construction of a document called a rent-note and dated 22-2-1824, it created only a tenancy from year to year, or whether it created a permanent lease, which could only be terminated by non-payment of rent.

Held that the terms of the document and the circumstances of the case justified the conclusion that the document was intended to record a transaction by which a permanent right to occupy was conferred upon the grantees.

Their Lordships think that the terms of the document which may not be satisfied if the tenancy were one from year to year, coupled, with the fact that notwithstanding the low rent, which was never changed, the property has been in fact dealt with by the lessees on three separate occasions in 1872, in 1883, and in 1900, by being subleased for substantial periods of years at increased rents, a circumstance which it is not unreasonable to assume must have come to the knowledge of the lessors at some time or another, and that no dispute has arisen as to their right to make such grants or to remain in occupation until the present time, is sufficient

-Clavadas mirasidars-Description of lessees as-Effect.

One of two persons, through whom the respondents claimed, acquired rights in certain lands under permanent leases granted by the manager of a temple in 1813 and 1820. In 1831, the lessee and the other person from whom the respondents derived title petitioned the Collector, under whose management the temple then was, for a lease of the land for one year. No reference was made in the petition to the former leases and the petitioners described themselves as Purakudis. In 1832, they executed a muchilika and security bond to the Collector, who sanctioned the lease to them in 1833. In those documents they described themselves as Ulavadai mirasidars, but there was nothing else to indicate their claims to a permanent tenure. In a suit by the manager of the temple in 1892 to recover possession of the lands the respondents set up the defence that they held on a permanent tenure and were not liable to be ejected. The High Court held that it was not sufficiently proved that the tenancy under the leases of 1813 and 1820 was ever determined, that the transaction evidenced by the muchilika was a confirmation of the former leases and not a new lease, and that the respondents held the lands on a permanent tenure. In support of their conclusions the learned Judges attached much importance to the description of the applicants, in the muchilika and security bond, as Ulavadai mirasidars.

Held by their Lordships that the question, whether the respondents had a permanent tenure or not, was under the circumstances of the case to be decided on the contract sanctioned by the Collector in 1833 and that under that they obtained nothing more than a yearly tenancy.

The words "Ulavadai Mirasidars" do not have a well-established meaning and it would be extremely unsatisfactory to rest the decision on those words (92). (Sir Andrew Scolle.) SEENA PENA REENA SEENA MAYANDI CHETTIAR :: ('HOCKALINGAM PILLAL

PERMANENT TENURE-ESTATE FOR LIFE-ESTATE POUR AUTRE VIE.

Zemindar-Pottah granted by.

R. a brother in-law of S. had been together with other members of his family the holder of a jote within a Zemindari, including the suit lands. It was a patrimonial property held before him by his ancestors for some generations. The Zemindar sued R and the other jotedars for enhancement of rent, and succeeded in establishing the right to enhance the rent to such an extent that the jotedar declined to hold the property on those terms, and accordingly relinquished it. Thereupon a re-settlement was made with R, contracting in the name of S, of a portion of the property which had been relinquished, and at a much lower rent than the enhanced rent. The pottah, which embodied the re-settlement recited the above facts, and proceeded: to justify them in saying that the memorandum signed on the above land and jumma you appeared through your When I caused notice to be given for the settlement of

Your application is approved; and after deducting certain quantities, a portion of land amounting to 1.785 trighas is granted "at a fixed rent" of Rs. 618. There was a further provision that if any loss arose from inundation and so forth the tenant should continue to pay the rent, and then followed the provision :- "Over and above the said rate at which I have fixed the rent and granted this portah neither I nor my heirs shall upon any account enhance the rent of the said land and jumma, or allow it to be enhanced "

Upon R's death, he was succeeded in the possession of the property by his widow as guardian of his minor son, and the son upon attaining his majority took possession himself. The Zemindars recognised that possession They asserted and confirmed the legality of the possession of R's widow on behalf of the minor as succeeding to R, and they further on several other occasions more especially referred to, in 1865, when it would appear that S really was dead, brought suits for rent against R's widow and his son, treating the son as

Held that the intention of the parties to the pottah was to create a permanent tenure, and not an estate for life or an estate pour autre vie for the life of S (166). ROBERT WATSON & CO. p. MOHESH NARAIN ROV.

He should not demur or put forward any excuse in this, and should act up to the above."

The pottah then stated the rent payable by the grantce. Held, affirming the High Court, that, upon a consideration of the object of the pottah and its language and provisions, as well as the surrounding circumstances, the intention to grant a perpetual lease did not sufficiently appear (40). -Life interest-Grant of-Words-Mocurrari-Un of-Effect.

The suit was to recover possession of a mouzah of which a mokurrari lease had been made in 1853 to one T. The defendants alleged that the tenancy was hereditary, and the question for decision was whether the lease created a hereditary interest or an interest only for the life of T.

The circumstances of the case were as follows:-

The mouzah in question was formerly a ghatwali tenure. Therefore by its nature it was in fact a hereditary tenure. and the ghatwals or their descendants could not be ejected. The ghatwali estate was sold for arrears of Government revenue in 1838, and was purchased by the predecessor of the plaintiff in the suit out of which the appeal arose. The purchaser brought suits to set aside encumbrances, and amongst others, the ghatwals were sued. T was one of those tenants who were seed for the setting aside of his tenure. He pleaded that he was a ghatwal. The suit, however, was to set aside the sunnud on which his title was based, and there was no admission, nor was there any finding, that T was a ghatwal at all. He compromised the suit, and permitted a decree against him on the condition of receiving the suit lease.

The High Court held, affirming the court below, that the lease enured only for the life of T. They observed: There are no words whatever in this pottah which would import any hereditary interest, and it has been held fre-quently that the word "mokurrari" alone does not import anything more than fixed rent. It was contended that the tenure having been held by T and his predecessors for a long series of years, it is not likely that he would, without consideration, consent to give up his position altogether and take a lease for his own life. But it is quite possible that he felt that his case was a precarious one, and that it would be better than having a decree ousting him from this tenure, to enter into a compromise by which he could secure his tenancy for his own life."

Their Lordships concurred in the construction put upon the pottah by the High Court (Sir Barnes Peacock.) PARMESWAR PERTAB SINGH P. PADMANUND SINGH.

A Mahomedan Zemindar had two wives, but no children by either. He had, however, by a Mahomedan lady of the Sheeah sect four illegitimate children, S (a daughter) and the respondent being two of them. Six days after the birth of S, he granted a mouzah at an annual rent of 301 six a rupees to her on mokurrari lease "from generation to generation". S died at an early age in the lifetime of her father. Her mother who had been in possession ever since the grant continued in such possession up to her death in 1860. During her life and for years afterwards the rent was received by the Zemindar and after his death in 1858 by his two widows as his heirs. In 1865, the widows, alleging that they had only recently discovered the death of S, claimed to resume the mouzah, and brought the suit out of which the appeal arose for that purpose. Their case was that the grant to S having failed, the beirs of the grantor were entitled to resume.

Semble though the parties in possession could not be treated as trespassers, and the perception of rent created some species of tenancy, such perception of rent did not amount to a re-grant and was not of itself a sufficient answer to the plaintiff's claim to resume. (Sir fames W. Colvile.)

The grantee of a village from a Zemindar under a grant made in lieu of maintenance died childless, having previously executed a permanent pottah in respect thereof to the defendant. The defendant was, however, left in possession by the grantor's successor, paying the same rent as that fixed by the pottah. That successor was succeeded by his son P, who allowed the defendant to remain in possession at his former rent.

Held, on his accession P might have resumed the village or have made a fresh grant either on the terms of the pottah or otherwise, or have allowed the defendant to remain in possession, paying a rent. But as the pottah was void as against him, and not voidable only, the mere receipt of rent by him, though of the same amount as that fixed by the pottah, would not have the effect of confirming the pottah ——Tenancy between them and lessor—Agreement as to — Exidence establishing—Agreement to the contrary within the meaning of S. 110 of T. P. Act—Facts establishing.

The proprietor of an estate leased two villages appertaining to the same under a "mokurrari istimrari" lease, dated 31-12-1865. The lease was a lease for the life of the original lessors, both of whom died about 1891, having, in 1879, assigned their interest in the villages to one S. Subsequent to the said lease, the lessor gave a usufructuary mortgage to one N, who was in possession of the two villages from 1891-2 to 1897-8. N, the mortgegee, obtained decrees for rent against the original lessees, and S, the assignee, which were duly satisfied by them or their successors in interest. After the mortgage came to an end in about 1898 no rent was paid by S, or the defendants, his successors in interest, to the original lessor or to anyone else. S continued in possession of the villages until his death in 1915, and thereafter the defendants, his heirs, continued in possession. In 1920, the plaintiff, the succe-sor in interest of the original lessor, sued the defendants for possession of the villages, alleging that the nature of the tenancy was a holding over by S and his successors upon the terms of the original lease, except as to duration; that, by reason of S. 116 of the T. P. Act, it became a tenancy from year to year; that it remained in existence till 1915, when notice to quit was given, and that the suit was therefore not barred.

The evidence showed that the position between the original lessor and the defendant's predecessor-in-title was as follows:—On the one hand, the original lessor was asserting that the grant to the original mokurraridars conveyed a life-interest only, and that after 1891, the date of the death of the original lessees, the predecessors of the defendants had no right to be in possession of the lands; on the other hand, the mokurraridars and their assignees were claiming that the lease was of a permanent heritable character, and that that was the position up to 1903, when S endeavoured to get his name entered as the holder of a permanent tenure, and the proprietor refused, and would only agree to give marfatdari receipts, which S declined to adopt, with the result that S remained in possession without paying any

Held that, so far from being in agreement as to a tenancy, the parties were at arm's length, and, after the termination of the lease for lives, there was no recognition by the plaintiff or his predecessor-in-title so as to constitute the defendants or their predecessors in title tenants, as alleged by the plaintiff, and that the evidence showed, on the other hand, that the then proprietor of the estate refused to recognise the defendants' predecessors as his tenants.

The heirs of a lessee under a lease for life, who continued in possession after the death of the original lessee, claimed a permanent right and endeavoured to establish it by getting the landlord to accept rent and give a receipt in their name. The landlord received the rent, but protected himself by giving receipts in the names of the original lessees. This state of things went on for a number of years, when the heirs, or one of them on their behalf, demanded receipts in their own name, and the landlord refused to give such receipts and no more rent was paid.

Damages fer-Assessment of-Principle-Lessor-Dispossession by.

In a suit brought by the respondents against the appellant to recover damages for the loss alleged to have been sustained by the former through the wrongful act of the appellant consisting in the ouster of the respondents from certain leases for a term of 10 years in which they alleged themselves to have been interested under a grant made by the ancestors of the appellant. the question was as to the principle upon which the damages had to be assessed.

Held, varying the Court below, that, in computing the value of the lease, no allowance ought to be made for the supposed profit rent of Rs. 11,792, but that allowance ought to be made for one-half of any increased rent which had been secured by the lessee before the eviction, and also for any excess of the sum allowed to the lessor for expenses of management, beyond the necessary expenses of collection; and that regard ought also to be had to the chance of any increase of rent which the lessee might have fairly expected to receive.

Their Lordships agreed with the Court below in thinking that the respondents could not claim a share of the profits made by the new lease granted by the appellant, because such profits were not made, and it did not appear that they could have been made by the original lessees.

There being no means of fixing the amount of damages assessed upon the above principles, their Lordships fixed a gross sum by way of damages (335-8). (Mr. Pemberton Leigh.) RAJAH BURRODA KANT ROY v. RAM TUNNOO (1848) 4 M.I.A. 321 = 7 W.R. (P.C.) 51= BOSE. 1 Suth. 191 = 1 Sar. 355.

Where, in a case in which the lessee under a lease for a fixed term of years died before the expiry of the term, the lessor, during the period of the term, granted a fresh lease to other persons, who entered upon the possession of the leased property and thereby dispossessed the heirs of the deceased lessee for the remainder of the term, held, that the Court below was right in making the lessor responsible for the loss caused to the heirs of the deceased lessee (276-7).

The lessor is the original and moving cause of all the loss which has befallen the heirs of the deceased lessee. Without due regard to the contract he bad entered into, and whilst that contract was still subsisting, the lessor demised to the new lessees the leased property for an increased rental. He has, therefore, by his own acts, and through the medium of others whom he empowered to act, violated his own engagements, and thereby occasioned great loss to the heirs of the deceased lessee. For this loss he has justly been made responsible (276-7). (Dr. Lushington.) MAHARAJA TEJ CHUND BAHADOOR D. SREE KANTH GHOSE.

Dispossession by.

The appeal arose out of an action brought by the respondents against the appellant to recover damages for the loss alleged to have been sustained by the former, through the wrongful act of the appellant. The wrong complained of was the ouster of the respondents from certain leases in which they alleged themselves to have been interested under a grant made by the ancestors of the appellant.

The lease was for a term of ten years. One N was the lessee under the lease, and the predecessor in interest of the respondents first became a surety for the due performance by the lessee of the obligations contained in the lease, and afterwards became a partner with the lessee.

It was contended that the predecessor in interest of the · respondents was no party to the contract with the lessor, and therefore could not sue for any breach of it.

Held that the answer to the contention was that the suit was not founded in contract, but in a wrong alleged to have been done by the appellant in depriving the respondents of property in which they had a valuable interest (333). Held that in point of law the agreement contained in the pottah to grant a renewal did not create or vest in the ijaradars a fresh term of years (168).

The agreement merely gave the ijaradars a right to a renewal of the lease, and to compel the landlord to renew it if she should attempt to turn them out of possession at the expiration of the term. It also gave the landlord a right to the land, and to let it to others if the ijaradars should refuse to accept a pottah and execute a kabuliyat within two months after the rent to be paid during the renewed term should have been duly ascertained and fixed as per the provisions of the clause for renewal (168-9). RENEWAL OF-COVENANT FOR-(Contd.)

A lease of land for a term of 99 years at a stated yearly rent contained, inter alia, the following covenant:—

"That he the said F" (the lessee) "his heirs, executors, administrators or assigns fulfilling the covenants and agreements hereinbefore contained and on his part to be performed and yielding and paying at the end and expiration of the aforesaid term of 99 years into the United Company," (the lessors) "their successors or assigns, the full and just sum of 100 pagodas current money of Fort St. George, then this leave shall and may be renewed for a further term of 99 years upon such terms and conditions as shall be judged reasonable".

At the date of the expiry of the term fixed by the lease, the respondents were in possession of only a small portion of the lands demised, and they instituted the suit out of which the appeal arose against the lessors for a declaration that they were entitled to a renewal for 99 years of the term granted by the said lease as regards the whole of the property demised, or, alternatively, as regards the part retained by the respondents and specific performance of the covenant for renewal. The owners of the remainder of the demised premises were not parties to the suit, nor did they make any claim to such renewal.

Held that the respondents could not, under the circumstances, claim a renewal of the lease in respect of the small plot in their possession.

The covenant in the lease was clearly a covenant to renew the lease in question: "then this lease shall and may be renewed, etc." That must mean the lease as a whole, including the subject-matter of the demise, which is the parcels as set out in the lease. Moreover, the lease is to be renewed "upon such terms and conditions as shall be judged reasonable"—a provision which is plainly applicable to the premises as a whole and might easily vary if applied to specific portions held under varying conditions and circumstances. It was contended that as the lessees under the lease were entitled to assign portions of the premises the covenant for renewal would attach to each assignce holding his past in physical severalty, but no authority for such a proposition in a claim for specific performance has been cited.

Held further that the alternative claim to get a renewal of the whole plot was, under the circumstances, existing at the termination of the lease, untenable. (Lord Carron.) SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL F. VOLKART BROS. (1928) 55 I. A. 423 = 51 M. 885 =

- Entire term-Sub-lease for-Assignment or transfer if a.

A lessee, who intended to sublet the property leased to two gentlemen, carried out his intention by a lease to them for the whole of his own term of 10 years, with covenants in precisely the same terms as those in the lease to himself. The only difference was that a larger rent was payable to him.

Hild, that such a sub-demise for the entire term of the sub-lessor amounted to an assignment or transfer (435).

The reasons for treating an under-lease of an entire term were given in Beardman v. Wilson. No doubt the sub-lessor may contract with his sub-lessee in a fashion which is analogous to that of a demise. But so far as the property in his term is concerned he has none left after he has made what is really a transfer (435). (Viscount Haldane.) HERBERT HALLEN: BENJAMIN SPAETH.

tenant, deceased, was not at variance with the established customs under which such property was held in Bengal.

It is not averred nor proved that the subsistence of the lease for its full term, although the original lessee should die during the currency, is an unusual occurrence in Bengal; nor is it said that the maintenance of such lease would be productive of injury to the community. So far from being detrimental to the just rights of property or due cultivation of soil, a holding which enables the lessee to expend his capital in the improvement of his farm, without the prospect of the due reward being lost to his heirs in case of his own death before the expiration of the term, cannot be otherwise than beneficial (274-5). -Hindu Law rule as to.

In the case of a lease for a term of seven years granted by the appellant, it was found that, according to the general principles of construction applicable to the grant, the prime facie construction of the grant was that it was for a fixed term of seven years, and that it did not terminate with the death of the original lessee. The question was whether that prima facie construction was contrary to the Hindu law.

Held, that there was nothing either in the text-books of Hindu law or in the decided cases opposed to that prima facie construction (273-5). (Dr. Lushington.) MAHA-RAJAH TEJ CHUND BAHADOO D. SREE KANTH GHOSE. (1844) 3 M.I A. 261 = 6 W.R. (P.C.) 48 = 1 Suth. 152 = 1 Sar. 278.

Psesumption.

The question was whether a lease of a pergunnah for a term of seven years granted by the appellant terminated with the death of the original lessee, or survived, during the remainder of the term, to his heirs and representatives.

The lease was not in writing, but the terms thereof appeared from a notification addressed by the appellant to The notification all the native officers of the pergunnah. was as follows: - 'The mehal in question has been given in farm to N" (the lessee) "from 1210 to 1216 B. S. (1803-4 to 1809-10), for a period of seven years; he will receive petitions and kabooleats, and take possession and transact business according to rule. You will attend upon him and cultivate the soil, pay rent, render papers, and not act contrarily in any way.

Held that, according to the general principles of constauc tion applicable to the grant, the lease did not terminate with the death of the original lessee but survived, during the remainder of the term, to his heirs and representatives (273).

With respect to the construction of the grant, it is contended, on behalf of the appellant, that it contains no words which would necessarily import a continuance of the interest after the death of the grantee, and this may possibly be true. But, on the other hand, the lease is for the fixed term of seven years, and there are no expressions which point to any earlier determination of the interest. The prima facie meaning, then, is continuance for seven years; and had there been any intention on the part of the grantor to have affixed any limitation, he ought to have done so by the insertion of qualifying terms. Had such been the intention of the parties, nothing could have been easier than to have added the words "provided the grantee so long live," and if the party having full power to engraft this qualification omits to do so, the general principles of law would be opposed to any implied presumption (273.) -Proceedings for-Parties-Lessor and lessee necessary parties.

The right of the lessee under a lease should not be allowed to be challenged and no material step leading to it should be taken by a court, unless the contracting parties are convened before it (298.)

The respondent was in possession under a putni of certain brahmottar lands which were understood to contain valuable minerals. The minerals could belong to either the Rajah of C or P, from whose estate the brahmottar lands had originally been taken, or to the Crown. But the respondent might assert a title to the minerials. The plaintiff-appellant, who was in the coal business and was wishful to obtain the right to work that field, offered to take the same on lease, and the respondent accepted the offer and took the earnest money, but afterwards refused to grant the lease. The agreement between them contained, inter alia, the following clause: "If ever any dispute over title arises with the Rajah of C. or any one else, then you shall remain liable for the same; you shall give me all necessary papers, etc. for the establishment of your title as they may be required by me."

LEASE-(Contd.)

In a suit by the plaintiff for damages for breach of contract, held that, in face of the clause set out above, it was impossible to construe the contract as one in which the respondent warranted the mineral as conveyed, and that all that the plaintiff, if the contract was implemented, was to get was the chance of either fighting the Rajah, of the success of which there was very little prospect, or, by having secured the surface rights, being in a position to hamper the Rajan in letting to anyone else, and consequently impelling him to grant fair terms to the plaintiff himself.

Held further that, inasmuch as that chance was all that the plaintiff was deprived of by the breach, the exact valuation of such a chance was impossible, and the plaintiff had led no evidence to make approxinate valuation easy, the High Court acted rightly in awarding Rs. 5,000 as damages. Appellant made a grant to the respondent company of coal, land, and mining rights in certain mauzas for a term of 999 years. By clause 1 certain royalties were fixed for each ton of coal, and by clause 2 it was provided that the royalties mentioned should be payable quarterly. By clause 3 a certain minimum royalty was provided, which after the second year obliged the lessees to pay " an annual minimum royalty" of Rs. 13,904 until the expiration of the term, with a provision that if the royalties paid under the earlier clause were found on taking the accounts at the end of each year to be less than the minimum royalty, the lessees should be bound to make up the loss and pay the sum of Rs. 13,904 in full within the two months of the following year. By clause 6 power was given to the lessees to take the necessary surface land for the purpose of carrying on the colliery business at a certain fixed rent per bigha, and this rent was to become due at the end of each Bengali year. By clause 9 a right was given to the lessees to surren'er the term, the words of the clause being :- "That, if you so wish, you shall be entitled to surrender all or any of the mauzahs hereby leased out to you by giving me six months' written notice, which you shall be competent to give me Ly a registered letter and paying the minimum royany for the said Six months, i. c., half of the annual minimum royalty. But I shall not accept any surrender for a portion of any of the mauzas, neither shall you be entitled to surrender so long as any rent or royalty remains unpaid. Instead of relinbuishing all the mauzas settled, you will be able to relinquish any one or more of those mauzas, by giving six months' notice in writing in the above manner. If you surrender any one or more of the mauzas in this way, you shall be bound to pay the whole of the minimum royalty for all the mauzas leased out as fixed in clause 3 for the remaining mauzas, i.e., you shall not be entitled to get a proportionate reduction in the minimum royalty of Rs. 13, 904 fixed as above for surrendering one or more than one mauza in the above way "

On May 11, 1912 the respondents gave six months' notice |of their intention to surrender all the villages. The appellant's manager requested that a formal deed of surrender should be executed. On May 22, 1913, the deed not having been yet tendered or the amount due ascertained, the appel lant denied that the surrender was effectual on the grounds that the notic: did not expire at the end of the Bengali year, generation to generation " would make the grant one of a and that the amount due had not been tendered.

In a suit subsequently brought by the appellant for the royalties on the basis that the lease was subsisting, held-

(1) that the right to give notice under clause 9 could be exercised at any time;

(2) that that clause did not require that the amount due should be tendered when the notice was given, and that, the appellant's manager having requested that the surrender should be by deed, the payment had not to be made until the deed was tendered; and

(3) that the lease had been terminated and the suit was therefore unsustainable. (Lord Buckmarter.) RAJA DURGA PRASHAD SINGH P. TATA IRON AND STEEL CO., LTD. (1918) 45 I.A. 275 = 46 C. 552 =

Mocurrary istimrari lease.

-Duration of-Lease to A alone, and for life only-Lease to A and his brothers jointly and to their heirs-Evidence.

The question was whether a modurnary intimears leave of property made in 1795 was a grant to H alone, and for life only, or to him and his brothers jointly, and to their respective heirs. The deed of grant was in an altered condition, and its original condition was one of the chief points in dispute in the case. H had two brothers; and some time in 1806 or 1807 a partition of the property comprised in the Sanad was made between the three, by or with the sanction of their father. That transaction must have been known to the grantor, or to persons who would soon have made it known to him. If died in or about the year 1819; and even after that the tenure continued to be enjoyed by some of the members of his family. In 1839, the lessor granted to the plaintiff, his son, a Teeka lease of his interest in certain mouzahs, including those comprised in the mokurrari lease to H; and the mouzahs included in the mokurrary lease to If where then treated as being still subject to a subsisting mokurrari tenure. The plaintiff knew of the partition between H and his brothers, if not when he took the Toeka lease, at least when he took proceedings in 1841 for recovery of arrears of rent due under the Mokurrery tenure. And yet the very form of his proceedings recognised that partition, and admitted the subsisting right of mocurraridars, though long after the death of II, and at a time when he was hostile to them. In 1840, the lessor died, I aving two sons, the plaintiff and another They made a partition of his estate, and the suit property fell to the share of the plaintiff. On that occasion it was again treated as held by a subsisting mokurreri tenure.

Held that the case must be decided by the presumptions arising from the above mentioned acts and conduct of the parties during a long series of years, and that the weight of the evidence, independently of the disputed Sanad, was in favour of the view that the grant was to H and his brothers jointly, and to their respective heirs (25). -Liability for royalty for use of-Construction of

The appellant was before the year 1912 in possession of oil weil sites in Upper Burma. By a grant of April of that year, after reciting the fact that the appellant was in possession of the well site in question, the Government granted to the appellant a right to win and get earth oil from the said well site in such manner as he or his assignees might think ht, and to dispose of all earth oil to be gotten therefrom subject to the payment of a royalty to the Government.

By an indenture, dated 5-6-1918, the appellant granted a lease to the respondents for a period of 25 years. The lease recited that the appellant was the owner of certain oil well sites including the suit one and that he had obtained from the Government a grant of the right to win oil from the said oil well sites; and it proceeded to declare that the appellant thereby leased to the respondents his oil well sites and the right to win the oil therefrom for a period of 25 years from the date thereof. By clause 2 the indenture provided that during the period of the lease the said oil well sites and the grants for the same should be made over to the possession of the lesseesand the usa id possession shold not be withdrawn by the lessor. After the execution of the indenture, the respondents proceeded to sink wells for the purpose of obtaining oil upon the suit site as well as others included in the lease. No oil in any commercial quantity was obtained but gas came from the well so drilled, and the respondents gave up the search for oil and by pipes were able to enclose the gas and use it for their own purposes in and about the neighbourhood of the site. After that had been going on for some six years, the appellant instituted a suit claiming compensation for three years' user of the gas so taken.

Held, that the appellant was not entitled to the compensation claimed, because (1) oil did not include gas, and (2) the lease, upon its true construction, was not merely a lease of the right to win oil from the site, and the appellant never having had property in the gas at any material date, the respondents, who had dug the well and who took the gas as it came out of the well, were entitled to reduce it into possession and use it.

The indenture in terms expressly recites the owner-hip of the sites and of the grant as being two separate things and proceeds in its terms expressly to lease to the respondents both the sites and the right to win oil therefrom and to transfer to the respondents the sites as well as the grant of the right to win oil from them. In their Lordships' judgment the respondents were from the date of that indenture in possession of the site itself and not merely holders of the Government grant In those circumstances it seems to their Lordships clear that unless it can be said that the gas was always the property of the appellant, it never became his property at any material date. The view that gas under the soil before it had been tapped or released was the property of the appellant cannot be reconciled with the well-known authorities as to underground water not flowing in any defined channel. No doubt it is true that the gas could be reduced into possession, and when reduced into possession it became the property of the person who had so reduced it. But in this case the gas was not reduced into possession by the appellant but by the respondents.

Held further that there was nothing inconsistent with the terms of S. 108, sub section (o) of the T. P. Act in the use of gas which was necessarily set free by reason of the sinking of the oil well for the respondents' own purposes without doing any damage or any injury to the property lessed. Held, that the admission made by the defendant prima facie imported the relation of landlord and tenant, which carried with it the right to resume possession on proper notice to quit; that the onus lay on the defendant to defeat that right by proving the grant relied upon by him; and that he had entirely failed to prove it (57 59, 60). -Perpetual tenure of villages comprised in taluk-Plea of, in defence to suit for resumption by talukdar-Presumption of such tenure from long enjoyment-Propriety-Origin of tenancy shown at a rent twice increased and paid down to date of suit.

The plaintiff sought to resume his right as to two villages. His case was that B was the sanad holding talookdar of a taluka, which included the suit villages; that according to the sanad granted to him by the Government under Act I of 1869, he possessed all proprietary powers over the said

The plaintiff alleged that he had a right to resume possession; that he gave notice of his intention to resume; and that the detendant denied his right.

The defendant's case was an admission that he had paid rent, and that the piaintiff was the talookdar to whom he had paid it. The defendant rested his title to both villages on one and the same grant, in perpetuity, at a rent to be varied at a certain percentage according to the Government revenue. The defendant alleged that he held the villages under a grant for ever at a rent varying only with the amount of the Government revenue.

The District Judge, while holding there was no evidence of any grant, and the evidence entirely failed, said that he still came to the conclusion that time and undisputed enjoyment had ripened the holding of the defendant into a species of ownershin; and again, that the defendant had acquired by prescription a holding such as to entitle him to all under -proprietary right.

Held that such propositions were wholly inapplicable to a case in which the origin of the tenancy was shewn at a rent twice increased, and paid down to the commencement of the suit (66).

In such a case, length of enjoyment coupled with the payment of rent can give no greater force to defendant's right than it originally possessed (66). (Lord Fitz Gerald.) THAKUR ROHAN SINGH :: THAKUR SURAT SINGH.

-Conveyance in fee simple-Distinction.

A mocurrari (or permanent) lease is not tantamount to a conveyance in fee simple. Because at the present day a conveyance in fee simple leaves nothing in the grantor, it does not follow that a lease in perpetuity here (India) has any such result. The law of this country does undoubtedly allow of a lease in perpetuity. A man who, being owner of land, grants a lease in perpetuity carves a subordinate interest out of his own, and does not annihilate his own interest. This result is to be inferred by the use of the word 'lease', which implies an interest still remaining in the lessor. A lessee under such a lease is not a purchaser. (Sir Andrew Scolle.) Notice to quit—Tenancy determinable by — Evidence.

In 1797, N, the ancestor of the appellant, granted to S. the ancestor of the respondents, a lease, expressed in the terms of a pious gift, of certain lands at village C to be held by him and his heirs from generation to generation, subject to an annual quit-rent of Rs. 50, and in 1800 other lands in the same village were also granted to S to be held with the lands formerly granted on payment of a quit-rent increased by Rs. 100, which was reduced shortly afterwards to the extent of Rs. 50.

In 1802 the Permanent Settlement was introduced and the villages of C. M and B were included in the assets of the Zemindari.

Early in 1802 A' conferred upon S lands in the village of M in lieu of those held by him in the village of C, and in 1811 he conferred on him the village of B, to be held in lieu of the lands in the village of M at a quit-rent of Rs. 45 by the grantee and his heirs from generation to generation "for the satisfaction of Sri."

A' died leaving large debts. On receipt of the news of his death, the Board of Revenue directed the Governor's agent, who was in charge of the Zemindary, to adopt all measures in regard to resumption of inams and shrotriems to which it would be legal and proper for the late Raja's successor to have recourse. In anticipation of such instructions, the agent had in 1845 issued orders for the attachment of all lands conferred by the late Raja subsequently to the permanent settlement, whether agraharams (grant's made to Brahmins), mokashas or other inams. The Government, however, made it a condition of the attachment that the collections derived from the attached lands should be repaid to the inamdars to whom the attached inams might themselves be restored. Village B was one of such attached inams.

In 1850, during the dispossession, A, one of the sons of S, took a lease of village B for three years at an annual rent of Rs. 650. On the termination of that lease, the then Maharajah, the appellant's father, directed his agent to collect from the ryots of that village the quit-rents then existing, and a quarter of the entire assessment, and payments were made on that footing up to 1863, the village still being regarded as attached. The dispute relating to the propriety on the resumption was still subsisting, and it was probable that a settlement was delayed by the provision which the Government had made for the protection of the inamdars, that the income of any inam appropriated for the liquidation of arrears of revenue in the Zemindary should be repaid from the treasury of the Zemindar on the restoration of the inam.

In 1863, the eldest sons of the two sons of S each presented to the appellant's father a petition respecting the moiety of the village which (at a partition made previously between the sons of S) had fallen to his branch of the family. Upon those petitions, the Maharajah issued an order to each of the petitioners which differed from the grant made in 1811 only in the amount of the rent. The order directed the Tana Amin to put the attached lands in the possession of the petitioner from the current fusli, subject to a stated Kattubadi, and the pelitioner to take possession of the same, pay the said Kattubadi duly every year, and be bound by the Circar orders. Thereupon each of the petitioners executed sanads engaging to pay the rent and act up to the orders of the Circar," and they were put in possession of the village.

The Maharajah died in 1879, and was succeeded by the appellant. In 1881 the appellant called on the respondents to execute fresh engagements, undertaking to pay such rent as he might fix, and on their refusal notice was given them to quit the village on 1--7-1881, which they refused to do. The question for decision was whether the tenancy could be determined by the notice to quit.

The High Court held that the arrangement in 1863 resulted in a confirmation of the original grant of 1811 on terms more favourable to the Zemindar, that if the arrangement was to be regarded as a new grant it was intended to be the grant of an estate in all respects save the amount of quit-rent similar in tenure to that which had been created by the grant of 1811, namely, a tenure in perpetuity.

Held that the latter was the correct view but, that, in either view, the appellant had no power to determine the tenancy by the notice to quit (42). (Sir Richard Couch.) MAHARAJAH MIRZA SRI ANANDA Þ. PIDAPARTI SURIA-9 M. 307 (318-9) = 4 Sar. 696. NARAYANA SASTRI.

-Rent of-Fixity of-Presumption of-Enhancement of rent-Suit for-Onus of proof in.

Where in a suit for the enhancement of the rent of a tenure held under the plaintiff by the defendant it is admitted that the tenure is a permanent, heritable, and transferable tenure, there is a presumption in favour of the tenant and the onus is on the plaintiff to show that the tenure is wanting in the characteristic of fixity of rent. Where it was expressly stated in the books of the plaintiff that the tenure should not be liable to rent for the first four years, and that after that it was to carry rent on a progressive scale until in 1298 it reached one rupee one anna, and there was no reference to further enhancement by operation of law, held, that the clear inference from those facts was that the maximum rent reached in 1298 was the fixed rent of the tenure so long as it lasted. Clearing conditions in-Fulfilment of-What amounts to-Jungle land in Sunderbans - Cutting of timher not sufficient-Extinction of stumps necessary.

Under a lease of the 7th December, 1900, the Government gave an occupancy right for forty years from April. 1901, of jungle land included in Saugor Island, Sunderbans. Under the third clause of this lease one-eighth of the entire area leased was to be cleared and to be in a fit state for cultivation at the end of the fifth year, and at any time after the expiration of the fifth year the Sunderbans Commissioner or other officer appointed by the Government or any person authorised by him might enter on the land and cause it to be measured for the purpose of ascertaining whether the condition had been fulfilled. The fourth clause provided that on failure to comply with the above clearing condition, the lessees should be liable at the discretion of the Government to the forfeiture of all rights in land under the lease or to an annual penalty. The Government, if the lease was determined, was to have the right of immediate re-entry,

The Government having determined the lease on the ground of non-fulfilment of the clearing conditions, the lessees instituted a suit for a declaration that the forfeiture was invalid.

The trial Judge found that it was not proved that the lessees had broken the clearing conditions, and on that ground decreed the suit. The Court of Appeal held that the trial Judge had laid undue stress on jungle cutting alone. They held that the stumps had to be extracted also before the land could be fit for cultivation, and reversed the decree below largely on the ground that that was proved not to have been done.

Their Lordships concurred in the view taken by the Court of Appeal.

The Sunderbans is by nature a swampy jungle covered with trees. The soil is alluvial soil, formed by deposit from the Ganges, at whose mouth it is. The Government had, for a long time past, been taking steps to re-claim it, and to convert the jungle from being the mere home of wild beasts into rice tracts. For this purpose it was necessary not only to cut down the trees but to take out their stumps, and improvement leases were being granted on terms, such as those in the lease in question, which should secure that this was done. It is therefore, plain that the obligations in the lease to clear and to put into a fit state for cultivation, extended to the extraction of these stumps as well as to the cutting down of the timber. Under a lease of 7-12-1900 the Government gave an occupancy right for forty years from April, 1901, of jungle land included in Saugor Island, Sunderbans. Under the third clause of this lease one-eighth of the entire area leased was to be cleared and to be in a fit state for cultivation at the end of the fifth year, and at any time after the expiration of the fifth year, the Sunderbans Commissioner or other officer appointed by the Government or any person authorised by him might enter upon the land and cause it to be measured for the purpose of ascertaining whether the condition had been fulfilled. The fourth clause provided that on failure to comply with the above clearing condition, the lessees should be liable at the discretion of the Government to the forfeiture of all rights in land under the lease or to an annual penalty. The Government, if the lease was determined, was to have the right of immediate re-entry.

On the 12th April, 1906, the then Settlement. Officer who had taken over the duties of the Commissioner in the Sunderbans, an office which had been abolished, visited the property leased. He went to the property and looked at it with the aid of his binoculars both when he landed and subsequently from a boat. He however, took no measurements. He reported to the Collector that the clearing conditions had not been fulfilled and that the lease should be determined.

The lease having been forfeited in pursuance of the report of the Settlement Officer the lessees instituted a suit for a declaration that the forfeiture was invalid. The Sub-Judge who decreed the suit, relied largely on the carcumstances that S did not take measurements, Held that the Sub-Judge was wrong in thinking than an obligation to measure the land was imposed by the lease.

There was no obligation to measure imposed by the lease. There was a right, if the representative of the Government thought proper, to enter and take measurements, but no What the Settlement Officer had to determine, as a matter of fact, was simply whether one-eighth of the entire area leased had been cleared and put into a state fit for cultivation within the stipulated time. -Swampy land-Lease of, for limited term-Trees on land demised-Lessee's right to cut and carry away, for

The plaintiff-appellant was a lesssee under a lease granted to him by the Acting Collector of the District of Tanna of the Village of G. He complained that, contrary to the terms of that lease, the Government did not allow him to fell unassessed trees in the village, or to apply them to his own use,-that is to carry off the trees from the ground on which they grew, and to dispose of them to his own use. And he claimed damages against the Government for prohibiting him from cutting the trees.

The lease was for a term of 99 years, and the object with which it was applied for and granted was the reclaiming certain swampy land, and forming salt pans and salt balty fields, together with such incidental advantages as might be obtained from the use of the waste land as it then stood in the village. The claim of the appellant was not to cut certain trees for the purpose of clearance or cultivation, not to cut certain trees for the purpose of repairs or consumption on the ground of which the appellant was lessee, but to sell to a timber merchant the whole of the trees, large and small, upon the land, to be cut and carried away by him for his own purposes.

Held, upon the construction of the lease, that the appellant could only cut trees growing on the land demised for the purpose of clearance and cultivation, or for repairs; but that he had no right to fell and carry away for sale unassessed forest timber growing on the demised lands. (Lord

In 1792, shortly after the Decennial Settlement of a Zemindary had been completed, but before that Settlement had been declared perpetual, the then Zemindar granted lands within the Zemindary to A, at an annual rent under a Pottah. The Pottah was addressed to A as "Moostagar" (Farmer) of Mouzah C, and the operative part of it was as follows :- "Inasmuch as, in accordance with your application, the lands of the villages in the said forests have been assessed with a rental of 101 rupees, everything being consolidated, and a Pottah granted to you, it is required that you will in all confidence have the lands of the said forests occupied by Purbuttea and other Ryots, and keep paying to the Sircar the rent year by year, according to this Pottah; and whenever you may be summoned for the purpose of hunting, you will attend accompanied by all the Purbattes.

Held that the Pottak covered, not only the lands then in cultivation, but also the forest land which the grantee was to settle and reclaim by bringing Purbutteas and other Ryets upon them (462-3). (Sir Richard Kindersly.) RABOO DHUNPUT SINGH v. GOOMAN SINGH.

Presumption as to Lessee's suit for possession based on lease deed-Defence neither setting up deed of cancellation at once nor mentioning it specifically but introducing it at last stage and even then only incidentally-Effect.

The plaintiff-respondent sued to recover possession of the property leased to him under a registered lease deed, executed by the defendant-appellant in his favour. The defendant, inter alsa, set up an agreement executed in his favour by the plaintiff to the effect that if he should fail to pay the balance of the advance made payable by the lease deed within 5 days, he would return the lease deed and take back the amount actually advanced. The question was as to the genuineness of the agreement set up by the defendant.

There was no distinct allusion to such a document in the defendant's answer, but certain vague and doubtful expressions were relied upon, as showing that it must have been in existence at that time, although not specifically mentioned.

Held that the conduct of the defendant rendered the genuineness of the agreement very improbable (400).

The object of the suit was to obtain a decree to enable the plaintiff to collect all the revenue of the property leased to which he claimed to be entitled under the lease granted to him by the defendant. If the defendant's case founded upon the document in question was a true one, he had a short and conclusive answer to the plaintiff, and it is not unfair to presume that it would at once have been brought forward. If the document in question had been in exis-tence at the time of his answer, it is most unaccountable, that he should have left this complete answer to the plaintiff's case to the last stage of his pleadings, and even then have introduced it almost incidentally as part of a narrative of the transactions between them (400). The defendant, inter alia, set up an agreement of 25-11-1851 executed in his favour by the plaintiff to the effect that If he should fail to pay the balance of the advance made payable by the lease deed within five days, he would return the lease and take back the amount actually advanced. The question was as to the genuineness of the agreement set up by the defendant. The lease-deed was registered, but the agreement was not.

Held that the non-registration of the agreement in question was a circumstance worthy of remark in considering its genuineness (398).

Although the agreement might not have been one which it was absolutely necessary to register, yet when a lease was recorded which so seriously affected the interests of the lessor, it might have been expected that an instrument which five days after its execution had actually put an end to the lessee's right to the lease, would have been placed upon the register as a matter of ordinary prudence and precaution (398). Relinquishment of.

Provision for-Nature, object, and effect of-Retention by tenant of partion of area purported to be relinquished Validity of relinquishment in case of.

A mukurrari pottah contained provisious enabling the lessees, whenever they liked, to tender istafa (resignation) of the whole or any portion of the lands settled under the pottah and stipulating that, if such istafa be made, the lessees were to get a deduction in the rents at the rate of Rs. 6 per bigha for the extent relinquished and that, with the exception of such deduction, all the other terms and conditions of the pottah should remain in force. In pursuance of those provisions, the lessees executed, and presented to the lessors, a deed of relinquishment, which contained an intimation that from 1863, the lessees would only remain in possession of 565 bighas of land, out of the lands settled, and would be liable only for the jamma due for that extent and that the lessors were at liberty either to settle the relinquished lands and their jamma with others or to retain their khas possession. Notwithstanding the deed of relinquishment, the lessees continued to remain in possession of 35 bighas in addition to the 565 bighas. In a suit brought by the lessors for the total rent due under the mokurrari pottah ignoring the deed of relinquishment, held that, as the lessees did not surrender the whole of the area they had purported, under the deed of relinquishment, to surrender, the relinquishment was invalid and they remained liable for the whole of the rent due under the Mokurrari pottah, though the extent of the lands not so surrendered was very small in proportion to that which they had purported to sur-

Quare: whether, if the terms of the mokurrari pottah had admitted of approximate equivalents for the total area professed to be surrendered to tenants would have been liable for the rent for the entire area settled by the pottah.

The right of relinquishment is a privilege given to the tenants, by means of which they may restrict the lease and establish their tenure upon agnew basis, or may extinguish the lease altogether; and the tenants cannot avail themselves of that privilege to any extent unless they strictly observe the conditions which are either expressed or are plainly implied in the lease itself. In so far as it concerns the power of relinquishment, the scheme of the contract embodied in the (suit) lease is exceedingly simple.

The istafa, or, in other words, the resignation made by the tenants, which, by the plainest implication, must contain a precise statement of the area to be so relinquished, is to form the basis of future relations between the contracting parties; and in order to fix for the future the rents which the tenants are liable to pay and the lessor is bound to accept, the lease contemplates that no step shall be necessary beyond measurement of the area surrendered, and deduction of an amount calculated at the rate of Rs. 6 per bigha for such area from the original rent. The view of the High Court that the istafa tendered may be qualified or restricted, not by the tenants making a new surrender, which would be within their competency, but by their simply continuing to hold possession of part of the area which they had surrendered, would defeat the plain intention of the contracting parties. -Possession never given to him-Possession of part of property only obtained by him by suit-Effect.

The appellant was the lessee under two mokurruri leases of certain shares in certain mouzahs. The respondent was the son of the purchaser of an entire mahal, of which the leased shares of the mouzahs were parts, at an auction sale for arrears of Government revenue. By the terms of S. 54 of Act X1 of 1859 (B. C.), the respondent's father acquired the mahal, subject to all incumbrances, and with only the rights which were possessed by the previous owner or owners.

Disputes arose between the appellant and the respondent's father, and the appellant accordingly brought a suit against the respondent's father and others to establish her rights to the shares in the mouzahs comprised in the leases, of part of which shares she said she was absolutely dispossessed, and of the other part that the respondent's father had denied her mokurruri right. That suit went up to the Privy Council, and by the judgment of their Lordships a decree was given to the appellant for possession as lessee of portions only of the land comprised in her leases, and the question whether she was bound to pay the whole of the rent reserved by the leases or was entitled to an apportionment was expressly left open. Possession of what was decreed was given to the appellant.

In a suit subsequently brought by the appellant against the respondent for the recovery of mesne profits for three years of the portion of land decreed to her, the respondent claimed to set off against the appellant's claim the whole rent reserved by the mokurruri leases for the three years. The appellant offered to pay such an amount of the rent reserved as was proportionate to the share of which she had obtained possession. It was either admitted or found that the appellant did not enter into possession under the mokurruris. The question was whether, in the circumstances of the case, the appellant was entitled to the apportionment claimed by her.

lands, to which the Zamindar had only a temporary interest, but which lands were included in the pottah. The Bheel Bhurruttee, lands were afterwards resumed by the Government under Beng. Reg. II, 1819, and assessed separately from the Zamindary, the jumma being paid by the lessee for a period of nine years. Held, in a suit brought by the lessee against the lessor's representative for remission of the rent paid on the resumed lands out of the fixed annual rent, that, by the terms of the pottah, the Bheel Bhurruttee lands were not included in the fixed annual rent.

" In addition to the Zamindary, which the Zamindar held in perpetuity, there were certain lands which were added by accretion to the Zamindary, which he held for a term of ten years at a jumma rent, with a right of renewal, more or less defined, but at all events with some preferential rights. In that state of things he sells (grants in putnee) his Zamindari and says nothing about the other lands. What does he sell? He sells, of course, the interest he had; he sells the perpetual interest in the lands he held in perpetuity, and he sells the interest he had in the lands, he was to hold for ten years, for the remainder of the term. At the time the sale is made, there were only ten months of that term to run. At the expiration of the ten months, the purchaser asks a renewal of the term. He has the right of renewal, or the right of throwing up the lands, but he has no contract or engagement with the vendor that will run for his benefit; but he makes a renewal by which he engages to pay a certain rent, and continues to pay that rent to the Government for nine years and then he institutes a suit for the purpose of obtaining repayment of what he has thus paid, insisting that he was entitled to it, and asking to have it deducted out of the rent which he had engaged to pay to the Zamindar. Their Lordships are satisfied that there is no ground for the claim," (because the renewal was his own act, and the sale included the unexpired term only). (Lord Kingsdown.)

RESUMPTION BY GOVERNMENT OF PART OF LANDS
LESSOR OR HIS HEIRS—RENT PAYABLE BY LESSEE IN CASE OF.

Rent fixed by lease or rent fixed by re-settlement— Lease itself contemplating such resumption and providing for it—Effect of rent in case of such resumption—Bengal Rent Settlement Act of 1879—S. 10—Effect.

In 1867 Raja B, from whom appellant's title was derived executed a pottah, creating, in favour of the respondent, an estate of permanent grant tenure in mouzah P, which included along with other chucks, the chuck K in dispute. The annual rent to be paid for the whole of the lands was Rs. 2.300. It was known at the time of the pottah that the Government had right to resume, and was likely to resume some part of the lands, and a claim was, therefore, inserted in the pottah providing for a proportionate abatement of the rent fixed if any part of the lands granted should be resumed by the Government.

In 1882 the Government did in fact resume, inter alia, the chuck K in dispute. The Government did not, however, take khas possession of chuck K, but granted it in temporary settlement to the heirs of Raja B, he being then dead. The period of settlement was 20 years from 1884, 1904 being "the year fixed for the expiry of settlement in the Presidency Division"; and the rent fixed for chuck K was

Rs. 850. The theory of the plaint, which was filed on 13-4-1897, was that the effect of those settlement proceedings was that the respondent became liable to the owner of K for the rent fixed in the settlement. Accordingly, the plaint ignored entirely the pottah of 1867, and rested the liability of the respondent on the settlement alone; and the appellant maintained his right to sue alone (he being purchaser of chuck only), without the action being sued by the owners of the other lands which formed parts of the ganti tenure of 1867, and for which the lump annual sum of Rs. 2,300 was the rent.

The respondent pleaded his ganti right of 1867, as constituting his title to the chuck \( \Lambda' \); and with reference to the demand for Rs. 850, he said that he did not hold any jami-jumma at a rent of Rs. 850-2-4 appertaining to chuck \( \Lambda' \) subordinate to the plaintiffs, and that he (defendant) did not bind himself by any engagement or pay rent regarding such jami-jumma either to the plaintiffs or to their predecessors, and that he was not bound to pay rent as above to the plaintiffs.

Held, affirming the High Court, that the defence of the respondent was well founded.

The settlement proceedings of 1884 cannot be held to have altrogated the rights of that respondent under the pottah, so long as the Raja R, and his heirs were themselves in a position to let him have the lands. In fact, the resumption by Government did not disturb the possession either of the Rajah's heirs or of the respondent. The mere fact of resumption cannot be held to have brought to an end the rights of the respondent under the pottah, for the pattah itself recognises the precarious nature of the grantor's title and provides against the loss of possession should that be the resuli (163-4.)

If it had seemed good to the Government to take the land into their own khas possession, or to settle it on strangers to the contract with the respondent, then the recorded rent would have been the rate of payment by that respondent. But the lands having been settled on the heirs of Raja B, who granted the pottah, the Bengal Rent Settlement Act of 1879 does not interfere with the contractual rights of the sabordinate holder. Now, the period of the settlement being still current, the ganti right still subsists and the respondent is only liable for the rent payable under the pottah (164), (Lord Robyrtson.) PRIA NATH DAS T. Resumption by lessor (Government) of, for public purpose - Provision for - (Contd.)

--- Residence for Government Officials if a public purpose within meaning of.

The first appellant was lessee under the Government as successors of the East India Company under a lease, which contained a power of resumption in favour of the lessor if "the company, their successors or assigns, shall, for any public purpose, be at any time desirous to resume possession of the premises granted" upon certain terms as to notice and compensation.

The second appellants were holders of land under G svernment in virtue of a sanad which declared the ground given in occupation was to be "at any time resumable by Government for public purposes" upon certain terms as to notice and compensation.

The Government in both cases gave notice to resume because they wanted the ground in order to erect dwellinghouses, which they could offer to Government Oriolals at adequate rents for their private residence. Suitable houses for Government servants were not easily obtainable in Bombay; though obtaining quarters of some kind was not an impossibility.

Held that such a scheme was a "public purpose" within the meaning of the contracts contained in the lease and the sanad, and that the Government was entitled to resume for such a purpose.

Their Lordships cannot agree with the view that there cannot be a "public purpose" in taking land if that land when taken is not in some way or other made available to the public at large. The phrase must inchale a purpose, that is, an object or aim, in which the general interest of the community, as opposed to the particular interest of individuals, is directly and vitality concerned" (47). -Separate registration and sub-assessment of village -Lesse's liability in case of.

At the time of the grant of a village of a Zemindar, the village was not assessed separately, and provision had to be made for the grantee bearing his proper share of Government revenue. The deed of grant, accordingly, declared that the grantee was to pay "every year to the Circar as peishcush Rs. 3500". In the very next paragraph, however, the deed clearly contemplated and provided for the separate registration of the village and payment by the proprietor of the village to the collector of the peishcush which the collector was to fix.

On a question arising as to whether on the true construction of the deed of grant the grantee was bound to pay a definite annual sum of Rs. 3500 to the holder of the Zemindary, or whether his liability was satisfied by paying direct to the Government the sum due to them from time to time as the revenue demandable by them in respect of the village from its owner, held that the sum of Rs. 3,500 was provisionally fixed as a sum sufficient to cover the proportionate amount of the Government revenue attributable to the village, but that the intention was that when the separation was effected it should be a final and complete separation, and that thenceforth the proprietors of the village should only be liable for the burthens properly incident to the property, and should discharge those burthens in the ordinary way by LEASE-(Contd.)

Meld that the word "hereafter" as used in the letter meant after the date of the letter, i.e., after the 21st November, 1903, but that so read the letter could not mean that N should have all time from and after its date to perform his contract, and that it must, in its proper construction as it stood, mean that he should execute the lease within a reasonable time from that date (337).

A Hindu Zemindar, having an illegitimate family by a Mahomedan lady domiciled in his house, executed a mokurraree pottah of a mouzah belonging to his Zemindary in the name of one of the infant daughters of that family, S, reserving to himself a certain rent charge out of the same. The

MOKURRAREE LEASE IN PERPETUITY AT FIXED RENT BY—PROOF OF—ONUS.

----Suit by Zemindar to recover lands alleging terminable leases found to be false.

Plaintiff, a Zemindar, sued to recover possession of certain lands appertaining to his Zemindary from the defendants. The plaintiff's case was that the defendants held under a ticca lease from 1851 to 1860, and that, consequently, after the expiration of the lease they had wrongfully held on. The defendants set up an old mokurruree grant under which they claimed to hold in perpetuity upon the payment of a fixed rent of Rs. 13 per annum.

Held that the onus of proof of a mokurruree grant lay entirely upon the defendants, that they were not relieved from that burden of proof even if the plaintiff had failed to prove the kabuliyats, set up by him and that on the evidence the High Court had rightly decided that the defendants had made out their case.

The grant itself, though perhaps not proved in the most satisfactory manner, still purported to be an ancient grant and came from the proper custody. It is to a certain extent verified by the other evidence in the case, by the evidence which the defendants gave of long-continued possession, carrying that possession back a great deal further than the plaintiff had admitted, in fact, to the time of the grant itself and even beyond it; and further, by the proof that the an-

---Property in the soil-Leasehold interest only-Word'

Under the terms of a putni lease granted by the predecessor-in-title of the plaintiff, a Zemindar, eight tarafs, with the exception of the grantor's Brahmottar and other Lakhiraj properties, constituting the entire Zemindary, including all interests therein, and Julkar, Bankar, Fulkar, Beels and Thik, were settled with the 1st defendant's predecessor, at the annual jama of Rs. 11,000, exclusive of certain charges and expenses therein specified; a premium of Rs. 11,000 was paid in respect of the lease. The grant to the lessee was described as a "Muffasil Patni Taluk lease according to the provisions of Regulation VIII of 1819".

The lease provided for the payment of the rental by certain specified instalments, and that, on breach of the instalments, the Zemindar should, according to the provisions of Regulation VIII of 1819, realise by attachment and sale of the putni interest the arrears, together with interest for de-fault of instalment and costs. It contained further provision that in the event of non-realisation of the said rents, interest and costs by the sale of the putni interest, the same might be realised by the sale of the lessee's moveable and immoveable properties. The lease contained the following clause :- "I shall not cut the trees myself, nor shall allow anybody else to cut them. In the case of cutting down trees other than timber trees and non-fruit-bearing trees. I shall give you information beforehand, and, on obtaining a letter, shall cut them down. And without a sanad signed by you. I shall not excavate a tank myself, nor shall permit anybody else to do so". The lease provided that the lessee should possess and enjoy the patni mahal down to sons and son's sons, etc., on payment of the rents thereof.

Held that, on the true construction of the lease, (1) there was no transfer of the property in the soil and the intention of the parties was that the grantee should be a leaseholder only, and (2) the grantee had no right to use the lands leased for making bricks and causing substantial damage thereto.

The expression "including all interests therein" in the lease does not increase the corpus of the subject of the lease. (Sir Lancelot Sanderson.) RAJAH BEJOY SINGH DUDHORIA F. SURENDRA NARAYAN SINGH. (1928) 55 I. A. 320=48 C. L. J. 268=111 I. C. 345=(1928) M. W. N. 841=

Zemindary had been completed, but before that Settlement had been declared perpetual, the then Zemindar granted lands within the Zemindary to .1, at an annual rent, under a Poltah, which ran as follows:-"Inasmuch as, in accordance with your application, the lands of the villages in the said forests have been assessed with a rental of 101 rupees, everything being consolidated, and a Pottak granted to you, it is required that you will in all confidence have the lands of the said forests occupied by Purbutter and other Ryots, and keep paying to the Sircar the rent year by year, according to this Pottah; and whenever you may be summoned for the purpose of hunting, you will attend accompanied by all the Purbutte-

Held that, on the true construction of the Pottah, it could not, taken by itself, be held to have granted a Mecurrary-is-timrary tenure (463).

It does not contain the term "Mocurrery", or any equivalent words from which an obligation on the part of the grantor never to raise the rent is fairly to be inferred; nor does it contain the expression "from generation to generation" or other like words importing that the tenure, whether the rent was to be fixed or variable, was to be hereditary. Again, it is not probable that the Zemindar would, immediately after the completion of the Decennial Settlement, grant a perpetual tenure at a fixed rent, except upon special grounds and adequate consideration, of which there is no proof. Further, the transaction on the face of it a grant of lands partly cultivated but chiefly waste, with the object on the part of the grantee, of bringing the latter into cultivation; and if, on the one hand, it is improbable that the grantee should undertake such an obligation without some fixity of tenure, and some assured and permanent interest in the lands, it is, on the other hand, equally improbable that the grantor should part for ever with all his interest in the improvable value of his lands (464-5). -Lease of-Payments made to village officers by lessee under-Release by Government of Zeminolar's liability for -Benefit of -Right to-Zemindar's or lesse's-Peisheush payable by Zemindar raised in consequence.

In 1894, the Raja of Ramnad granted a lease of certain villages appertaining to his estate to the defendant. In 1894, the state of affairs was this. The grain on the estates was all brought to the granary. It was then divided. The cultivating tenants got 52 p.c. of the grain. That left 48 p.c. undisposed of. Of this, 9 p.c. was appropriated to pay the village officers, and 3 p c. was appropriated for various charities. That left 36 p.c. which the Raja kept for his own use In 1911 the Government relieved the Raja from the charge of paying the village officers. They, however, raised the peishcush payable by the Raja obviously on the assumption that the Zemindar was the person who benefited by the relief afforded. The question for decision was whether, on the true construction of the lease-deed (the materials portion of the lease is set out in their Lordship's judgment) the Raja or the defendant was entitled to the amount which prior to 1911 had been handed over to the village officers.

Held, reversing the High Court, that the Raja and not the defendant was entitled to the said amount.

The High Court thought that the case was analogous to cases where, a conveyance having been made of lands under to the Zemindar. The appellant's case was that the lease, certain bardens, if from any extraneous cause the burdens under which the respondent held was a terminable lease, disappear, the benefit accrues to the grantee of the lands and not to the grantor. Their Lordships do not read the lease in this sense. They have come to the conclusion that the 9 p.c. was not conveyed to the Cowledar, that the ac facto handing over of the grain by him was really done ad hor as an agent for the Zemindar, and therefore the claim of the Cowledar to have a proprietary right in the 9 p.c. under a personal obligation to pay the village officers, is quite unfounded in the circumstances. A Zemindar has as such a prima facic title to the gross collections from all the mouzahs within his Zemindary, and it lies upon the party seeking to defeat that right to prove the grant of an intermediate tenure.

Appellant, a Zemindar, sued inter alia, to recover possession of two mourahs forming part of his Zemindary "in reversal of an allegation of Mocurrary, and proceedings of the Deputy-Collector and Collector," alleging that he had made over the suit villages, or their produce, to M, the predecessor in interest of the defendants, "in lieu of allowance," for his rendering service, and that subsequently he (appellant) discharged M from his service for bad faith whereupon his tenure determined. The defendants pleaded that M held the villages under a Moccurery (i.e. an hereditary tenure at a fixed rent) granted by the appellant as a reward for past services.

Held, that the onus lay upon the defendants to prove that they held the suit villages under a perpetual and hereditary tenure at a fixed rent and they could not rely upon the defects in the appellant's case (331-2). WIFE--LEASE TO-ESTATE CONVEYED UNDER.

Lease to tofe and her heirs or to teife and her son, lease ceasing to operate in event of son predeceasing her.

A Zemindar granted an ijara, dated 17th February, 1843, of villages situated within his Zemindari for a hundred and twenty five years to his wife // in these words:—' The ijara is granted to you for the performance of poors acts. At present you have a son, f, and if other sons or another son be horn, and if during the term of the ijara you die, then they will in equal shares enjoy the profits down to the end of the ijara."

The question was whether, on the true construction of the ijara, it was a grant to H and her sons, not being intended for the benefit of any heirs more distant than those specified, and when J died and H died, it ceased to operate, or, whether the ijara was to H and her heirs.

Held, affirming the High Court, that, on the true construction of the ijara, it was a grant to H and her heirs,

In their judgment the High Court say :- "There is nothing in the lease which would go to show that it was the intention of the grantor to limit it to a shorter period. In this case it seems to us that the reference to the sons was made in order to indicate that the ijara was not to come to an end on the death of H. Even if these words were not used, the lease, under its terms, would have descended to the heirs of II, but it was probably thought necessary to make that point clear; and in order to make it clear the last condition, that the ijara should continue to the benefit of the son or sons of H, was inserted." In this case the widow had no daughters, and it is stated that the only issue was the son who was named. The High Court have put the proper construction upon the document (Sir Rarnes Potosk) GOBIND LAL ROY D. HEMENDRA NARAIN ROY CHOWDHRY. (1889) 17 C. 686-5 Sar. 497. Zurpeshgi lease.

Plaintiff sued in 1886 for a decree for payment of primipal and interest and realisation of the decree by sale, or, in the alternative, for possession of the property claiming title under a Zurpeshgi lease of 1874. The respondents-defendants were persons who had "purchased the mortgaged property at auction on account of a debt contracted subsequent to the plaintiff's lien." Admittedly the plaintiff never got pussession under the suit lease nor any sums due thereunder.

Held, that it was incumbent on the plaintiff in a contest with the respondents to give satisfactory proof of the truth and reality of the original transaction, and some reasonable explanation of the delay in suing (523). (Lord Macnaghten.) GOSSAIN DALMIR PURI v. MOONSHI GOPI NATH.

on 2nd June, 1860 a decree against B for the recovery of possession of the said Mouzah K included in his Zur-i-peshgee lease and of the amount of mesne profits from fusli 1262 to the date of recovery of possession. Prior, however, to any proceedings taken to execute this decree, A's interest in the Zur-i-peshgee lease was attached and sold on 7-12-1874 in execution of a simple money decree obtained against him. The sale certificate described the property sold as "the right and title" (of the judgment debtor) "under the deed of Zur-i-peshgee lease, dated 23-12-1851 in respect of 15 mouzahs," including mouzah K. On an application by 4 to execute the decree dated 2nd June 1860 so far as related to the recovery of the mesne profits awarded by it, held that the right to the said mesne profits up to 7-12-1874 did not pass to the purchaser at the execution sale held on that date and that A was entitled to execute the decree so far as related to such profits.

The decree obtained by A was not sold, and presumably was not attached; what was sold is that which appears on the certificate, namely, the right and title under the Zur-i.peshgee deed, and the right of the judgment-debtor is declared to have become extinct only from 7-12-1874. This being all that was sold, their Lordships think that the right to the mesne profits under the decree dated 2.6-1860 was not the subject of sale. It was no more the subject of sale than any profits of the estate which the mortgagee had received prior to that sale would have been. The title to the mesne profits is derived from the decree. The defendants in that suit were wrong doers, and the action was brought by the mortgagee against them as wrong doers. The right to the mesne profits, therefore, depends wholly upon the decree; and if the decree had been sold, the purchaser, as assignee of the decree, would, no doubt, have been entitled to them. But what was actually sold was the existing rights of the judgment-debtor under the Zur-i-peshgee lease. (Sir Montague Smith.) GUNESH LAL TEWAREE v. SHAM NARAIN.

In a suit instituted by the appellants, the three sons of S. deceased, claiming through their father as heirs of one 6 (on the death of his widow) to recover possession of the suit property forming G's estate, the plaintiffs had, at the hearing, examined several witnesses and given in evidence several pedigrees which, in the opinion of the Subordinate Judge, proved that G and S were descended from one common ancestor, were only seven degrees removed from that ancestor, and that the plaintiffs were, through S, heirs of G. A decree was accordingly made in favour of the plaintiffs-

On appeal by the defendant, the Court below dismissed the plaintiff's suit, observing in its judgment, "The oral evidence to prove the pedigree in the plaint is thus, in my opinion, of as little value as the documentary evidence on which the plaintiffs relied, and at the hearing of the appeal practically no attempt was made to support the finding of the Subordinate Judge. The only contention was that, accepting the pedigree filed by the appellant," (defendant)

"the plaintiffs are heirs of G."

Held, in the circumstances of the case, that the plaintiffs were not by the statement quoted above in the judgment of the Court below estopped from endeavouring to sustain on the appeal to the Privy Council the finding of the Subordinate Judge. In this case it appeared that, in consideration of the High Court deciding the appeal before them upon one point only that is, the validity of the Mookternamah, the counsel for the appellant stated to that Court that he would not appeal from the decision as to the validity of the Mookternamah. The result of that agreement was this, and a very important result to the parties, that by obtaining the decision upon the validity of the Mookternamah alone, the case became a case not decided against B, the party in whose right the appellant was suing. If the case had been heard by the High Court, and upon appeal the merits had been gone into. and the whole matter determined upon as in a suit by B and others, B and the persons claiming under him would not have been precluded from appealing to the Privy Council. but might, on the other hand, have had two successive decisions against them upon questions of fact going to the merits of the case. But confining it to the decision upon the Mookternamah, it was really substituting a non-suit for an adverse verdict, leaving it open to B and the appellant himself, if he could get a new and genuine document in his favour, to bring a fresh suit.

Heli that it was clearly a valid agreement on the part of

ADVOCATE ADMITTED AS SUCH BY APPROPRIATE COURT IN INDIA AND DERIVING HIS GENERAL. AUTHORITY FROM BEING BRIEFED IN A SUIT-COMPROMISE OF SUIT BY-IMPLIED AUTHORITY AS TO.

Basis and nature of - Not an appenage of other.

The implied authority of Counsel briefed on the trial of a suit to compromise the same is not an appanage of office, a dignity added by the Courts to the status of burrister or advocate-at-law. It is implied in the interests of the client, to give the fullest beneficial effect to his employment of the advocate. (Lord Atken.) SOURENDRA NATH MITRA 7. (1930) 34 C.W N. 453 = TARUBALA DASI.

(1930) A.L.J. 489 - A. I. R. 1930 P.C. 158 = 58 M. L. J. 551.

-Express instructions of elecut to the contrary-Effect

The implied authority of coansel briefed on the trial of a suit to compromise the same can always be counter-manded by the express directions of the client. No advocate has actual authority to settle a case against the express instructions of his client. If he considers such express instructions contrary to the instructions of his client, his remedy is to return his brief. (Lord Atkin.) SOURENDRA NATH (1930) 34 C. W. N. 453= MITRA P. TARUBALA DASI. 1930 A.L. J. 489 - A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 158 - 58 M.L.J. 551.

-Same as that of advocates in England, Scotland, und Ircland-Grounds on which authority implied.

The power to compromise a suit is inherent in the position of an advocate in India. The considerations which have led to this implied power being established in the advocates of England, Scotland and Ireland, apply in equal measure to India. It is a power deemed to exist because its existence is necessary to effectuate the relations between advocate and client, to make possible the duties imposed upon the advocate by his acceptance of the cause of his client. The advocate is to conduct the cause of his client to the utmost of his skill and understanding. He must in the interests of his client be in the position, hour by hour, almost minute by minute, to advance this argument, to withdraw that; he must make the final decision whether evidence is to be given or not on any question of fact; skill in advocacy is largely the result of discrimination. These powers in themselves almost amount to powers of compromise; one point is given up that another may prevall. But in addition to these duties, there is from time to time thrown upon the advocate the responsible task of deciding whether in the course of a case he shall accept an offer made to him, or on his part shall make an offer on his client's behalf to receive or pay something less than the full claim or the full possible liability. Often the decision must be made at once. If further evidence is called or the advocate has to address the Court the occasion for settlement will vanish. In such circumstances, if the advocate has no authority unless he consults his client, valuable opportunities are lost to the client. On such grounds as these advocates in England, Scotland and Ireland have long been considered to have an implied power to settle a suit in which they have received a brief, Their Lordships are unable to see why the above considerations should not apply to an advocate in India, whose duties to his client in the conduct of a suit in no wise differ from those of advocates in England, Scotland and Ireland. There are no local conditions which make it less desirable for the client to have the full benefit of an advocate's experience and judgment. Their Lordships desire to confine their decision on this point to the case of advocates, whatever their qualifications, admitted as such by the respective appropriate Courts in India, who derive their general authority --- Compromise of suit by-Power of.

It does not appear to be necessary to decide whether a brief to appear upon an interlocutory application such as this (an application for the appointment of a receiver) could of itself confer authority upon counsel so briefed to sealle the whole action. It is obvious that briefs on some interrocutory applications could not obviously confer such authority. In other applications, and especially in motions for a receiver in a partnership suit, or on motions for an injunction, it has been common practice in this country (England) for counsel to settle the whole suit, but whether they derive their authority solely from the brief on the motion may be open to question.

Held, on a consideration of the whole course of the proceedings and the communications of the parties both with their own counsel and with one another, that it was the intention to place counsel, who had been briefed to appear on behalf of the defendant in a suit and support an interim application filed by her for the appointment of a receiver, in the same position and to arm him with the same authority as though he had received the brief to conduct the entire suit. -Validity of Points to be considered in determining -Enforcement of compromise by Court-Power and day as to.

An agreement to compromise a suit must be established by general principles which govern the formation of contracts, though there are special rules governing its enforcement by the Courts which arise out of its intrinsic nature. If the agreement purports to be concluded on behalf of one or both the parties by their respective legal advisers, the first two questions that arise, as on the formation of any contracts by agents, are:—

1. Had the agent, the actual authority of his principal, express or implied, to conclude the contract?

 If no actual authority, had he ostensible authority so as to bind his principal against the other party, relying on ostensible authority?

An agreement to compromise a suit, however, almost necessarily involves recourse to the further jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit is brought to effectuate the terms of the compromise. And in several cases in English law the Courts have refused to enforce the agreement of compromise where it has been established that the legal adviser had in fact no actual authority to seitle, or acted under some serious misunderstanding, so that to allow the other party to act upon an ostensible authority would be to impose upon the Court an exercise of jurisdiction which would in fact work substantial injustice. Hence there may arise a third question:—

3. Will the Court where the suit is compromised give effect to the terms agreed?

The questions in issue have, in a case arising in India, to be determined in accordance with the law in India, and it by no means follows that implications of authority which are readily inferred in other countries ought to be established in the conditions which prevail in India. (Lord Alkin.)

In Shanghai the two branches of the legal profession (Barrister and Solicitor) are amalgamated. The appellant and the respondent, who were called to the Bar of England, were admitted to practise and practised as duly qualified legal practitioners at Shanghai. They agreed to carry on the practice of law in partnership together. Sometime after, the appellant desired to return to England and executed a deed by which he agreed not to practise at Shanghai for a period of five years in return for a sum of money renouncing all his rights in the said partnership.

On his re-commencing to practise in breach of the agreement, an injunction was issued by the Shanghai Court restraining him from breaking his engagement, Held that the Court had jurisdiction to so restrain him.

There is no reason why a person who carries on both branches of the profession and is a legal practitioner in Shanghai should not enter into an agreement not to practise for a reasonable time. Thereafter, he allowed his wife to get leave to bid, without informing the court that she was a mere benamidar for himself, and then to purchase the property at the execution sale. At the time of the said sale the pleader had long ceased to be pleader, the mortgagors were represented by other pleaders, and there was no suggestion that any knowledge he had obtained while he acted as pleader was in any way conducive to his action in buying the property through his wife at the execution

Appellant, a pleader, was standing counsel of the Agra Mills, Ltd, for over six years under an agreement not to give advice or to conduct cases against the Mills, and obtained an increment to his retainer on the express undertaking that he would not appear for Messrs. John, who were the trustees for the debenture-hobiers in the said Mills. At a time when his exclusive retainer in favour of the Company was still running, appellant made himself responsible for the filing of the plaint in the said debenture holder's suit and accepted a brief from the plaintiffs in that suit.

Held that, in doing so, appellant acted in violation not only of the principles which govern the conduct of a legal adviser, but of the ordinary principles of good faith as between man and man, and that his conduct was irregular in form and improper in substance, and was " grossly improper conduct in the discharge of his professional duty" within the

But the finding of the High Court negatives that knowledge; and upon this finding of the High Court, their Lordships feel that, although in this matter the appellant has been guilty of a grave irregularity, which, in their opinion, is well deserving of censure, he has been acquitted of having acted with the malus animus which is a necessary ingredient in every fraudulent act, and, therefore, that his conduct, though censurable, does not bear the character which the heavy sentence passed upon him would stamp upon it (287-8). The petitioner, an Advocate of the High Court of Allahahad, published an article in a periodical of which he was both the editor and publisher. The article was a libel re-flecting not only upon Richards, J. before whom petitioner conducted a criminal case and with whom he had an altercation therein, but other judges of the High Court in their jedicial capacity and in reference to their conduct in the discharge of their public duties. The question was whether the publication of such alibel constituted "reasonable cause" within the meaning of S. 8 of the Letters Patent for the suspension of the petitioner from practice under the powers conferred by the Letters Patent.

Held that it did (45),

Having regard to the fact that in this case a contempt of Court was undoubtedly committed by an advocate in a matter concerning himself personally in his professional character, their Lordships agree that there was "reasonable cause" for the order suspending the petitioner from practice (45)

Held further that, as the whole controversy arose from the mishehaviour of the petitioner as an advocate conducting a case before the Court, and the contempt of which he was properly found guilty was committed in the attempt to vindicate his professional conduct in a publication for which he was solely responsible, the petitioner could not object to the order of suspension by drawing a distinction between "his capacity as an advocate and his capacity as an editor" (45-6). --- Lean application drafted on behalf of client-Misstatement as to purpose of loan in.

The gist of the offence imputed to the appellant, a Barrister, in respect of this transaction was reduced to this, erathat he, knowing that a portion of the moneys to be received by his client from a creditor. Firm was to be employed in payment of his fees, drafted for his client a letter calculated to induce the firm to believe that that advance was sought for a different purpose. As a matter of fact the creditor Firm declined to advance the loon; and there was no complaint whatever on the part of any person concerning that letter.

Held, that the drafting of the letter could not be taken to constitute such grave professional misconduct as would justify any part of the severe sentence passed against the appellant (283).

The appellant's client did want money for the purposes stated in the letter. Such an application does not imply any undertaking that the money if advanced is to be earmarked; is not to be mixed with the general funds of the debtor; and that no part of it is to be withdrawn, even temporarily, and applied to a purpose other than the one stated (283). The offence which he had committed was connected with an agitation against payment of the Mahar Baluta, and it appeared that in the course of such agitation he did not confine himself to protests, however vehement, against the tax, or against its injustire, but that he urged an organized resistance to payment, and attempted to establish a system which would have impeded and might have defeated its recovery with grave danger to public peace. Their Lordships will not attempt to give a definition of "reasonable cause" or to lay down any rule for the interpretation of S. 8 of the Letters Patent (Allahabad) in this respect. Every case must depend on its own circumstances. It is obvious that the intention of the Crown was to give a wide discretion to the High Court in India in regard to the exercise of this disciplinary authority. The rules of the Court, framed under that section, indicate the precautions taken by the Court itself to secure that the powers shall not be used capriciously or oppressively, and there is no reason to apprehend that the just independence of the Ear runs any risk of being impaired by its exercise. Their Lordships are of opinion that the preparation of the deed of conveyance containing an untrue statement of the transaction, and the attesting of the deed and a receipt for consideration money which was never paid, would be circumstances of great, perhaps over powering weight, as evidence of guilty contrivance against a solicitor, cognizant of the actual facts, in the event of such a deed, upon or soon after its execution, being used as an instrument of fraud. They are further of opinion that any solicitor may very properly be called upon by the Court before whom such a deed shall have been produced, to explain the circumstances attending its preparation and execution. But, if this explanation be given, if it be supported by evidence, if no counter-evidence be offered, if no fraudulent use of the instrument complained of has ever been made or attempted. and no person complained of any injury directly or inof-Distinction.

In an appeal relating to the conduct of a solicitor in such a community as Post of Spain it is necessary for their Lordships to bear in mind how greatly the conditions, under which the Court below exercised its disciplinary functions, differ from those which prevail in this country. A small community is one in which a solicitor is relatively a conspicuous person; in which the professional body is limited in number, and is therefore less able to overbear by the sheer weight of its probity the misdoings of a single member of it. The lay public may require, and certainly will benefit by the steady pressure of authority i | keeping its legal advisers to the line of their duty and the court which exercises that authority, must largely depend on the high standard observed by its officers, not being assisted by the presence of the professional organisation which exists in this country. It is for the judges of the court in the first instance to consider the form in which they ought to assert their disciplinary power over their officers, as it is also to consider the time and the circumstances under which to exercise that power of readmitting a repentent offender. It follows that English analogies are not always closely applicable in such cases, and that their Lordships must strongly rely on the local know-ledge and the judicial discretion of the Court whose order is under appeal (113). SUBORDINATE COURTS.

-Complaint to High Court by-Inquiry and punishment by High Court on-Power and propriety of.

The District Judge of Allyghur forwarded to the High Court a report of the proceedings in his court on an application made by the appellant, a Barrister, on behalf of one Mrs. S for letters of administration to the estate of her deceased son, imputing improper conduct to the appellant in that matter and submitting to the court whether such conduct was becoming a Barrister. On the receipt of that communication the High Court passed an order, calling upon the appellant to answer the matters stated in the District Judge's letter and report, whereby it had been brought to the notice of the court that the appellant had been guilty of grossly improper con-luct in the matters referred to by the District Judge.

On appeal to the Privy Council from orders of suspension passed by the High Court in pursuance of the inquiry made on foot of the District Judges' Report and Letter it was objected that the Judges improperly placed themselves in the anomalous position of being at once Accusers and Judges, and that they ought to have committed the conduct of the proceedings against the appellant to some third person. The Judges, however, stated that they had not the means of placing the conduct of the further proceedings in the hands of a third party.

Held that the omission to do so was not a fatal objection to the subsequent proceedings (278).

Whether the High Court would not have acted more regularly if it had placed the conduct of the further proceedings against the appellant in the hands of a third party, is another question (278). If it becomes known to an officer presiding in a Subordinate Court that one of the practitioners before that Court has been guilty of professional conduct, it would be within the scope of his duties to take steps for the purpose of having that matter adjudicated upon. -Misconduct before-High Court's power to deal with. on report by these Courts.

The High Courts in India exercise poculiar powers of superintendence and control over the Subordinate Courts, and the proceedings therein. It was, their Lordships apprehend, in the regular course of practice that the District Judge should make the report which he did make of the proceedings in his own court; and that he should complain. if he had ground of complaint, to the High Court of the supposed mala praxis of a practitioner over whom he had no direct power; but who, by virtue of being an Advocate on the Rolls of the High Court, had the right of appearing in the Lower Court; and their Lord-hips are of opinion that the High Court was perfectly justified in taking action on that report and complaint by calling upon the appellant to explain his conduct (277-8) (Sir James W. The question was whether a purdanashin lady, who was the defendant in a suit, had authorised the compromise of the suit made by her advocate. It further appeared that she was kept fully informed throughout of all the various stages of the negotiations, and was fully and intelligently aware that her advocate was clothed with authority to compromise the suit on her behalf, and was in fact exercising his authority in the manner afterwards complained of by

Vakil-Admission of, to practise before Privy Council as agent.

-Jurisdiction of Privy Council as to-Vakil not admitted as solicitor in England or in India.

Petitioner was a vakil in the Calcutta High Court, but he had not been admitted as a solicitor anywhere, in England or India. He applied to be admitted as agent to practise in the Privy Council, upon his subscribing the declaration prescribed by the Order of Her Majesty in Council of the 30th of March, 1870, "to be observed by proctors, solicitors, agents, and other persons admitted to practise before Her Majesty's honourable Privy Council.

Held that it was not within the power of the Judicial Committee to admit the petitioner to practise before them as an agent. The two sections of the said order in council which shewed what is the mode of admission and the classes to be admitted are the second and third; and those only apply either to solicitors or others practising in London, and to solicitors admitted by the High Courts in India or the colonies respectively. The question is whether those sules 2 and 3 are axhaustive of the classes to be admitted, or they only specified what should be done in the case of those two classes, and left an undefined class called "agents", who were to be admitted at the discretion of the committee. Mr. Taylor's case is exactly in point, and it decides that rules 2 and 3 are exhaustive of the classes to be admitted. (Lord Hobhouse.) TWIDALE'S PETITION, In re.

Person claiming under—Binding adjudication against legal representative. Title inconsistent with.

-Setting up of -Permissibility.

S mortgaged property standing in the name of his son, G, alleging that he had himself purchased it with his own funds in G's name, and was entitled to it. Pending a suit on the mortgage, S died, and G was brought on record as his legal representative. G did not set up any title in himself to the mortgaged property, and a decree was made in the suit holding the mortgagee's claim to be established, and treating the property as that of S.

Pending the suit on the mortgage, the Collector seized the property as the property of G, who had become a defaulter and debtor to the Government, and sold it in order to satisfy the demand against G.

In a suit brought by the mortgagee against the Collector claiming to be entitled to have the sale proceeds of the property in the hands of the Government applied in satisfaction of his mortgage debt, held, that it was not competent to the Collector to dispute the title of S to the property in question (296-7).

The Collector claimed under or in right of G, and as against him the mortgage was established upon the estate, as part of S's assets, by the decree in the mortgage suit (297). (Mr. Pemberton Lengh.) DOUGLAS v. COLLECTOR OF BENARES. (1852) 5 M.I.A. 271 = 1 Suth. 231 = 1 Sar. 434.

Held that a decree awarding the demand against the defendants in proportion to their appropriations, and rendering them personally liable to that extent in addition to the charge upon the assets of the deceased was erroneous (141-2).

The defendants were not liable except as representatives of the deceased. As representatives they were liable for the whole debt to the extent of the assets received and not duly administered by them respectively. It is not because an executor or heir has only three-fourths of the assets that he is liable only to three-fourths of the debt. He is liable to pay the whole debt so far as the assets in his hands will go (142). (Sir Barnes Peacock.) MUSSUMAT MULLEKA P. MUSSUMAT JUMEELA. (1872) Sup. I.A. 135 =

S. 1 of Act XII of 1855 does not apply to a suit to recover property or its value after conversion.

In a suit brought by the plaintiffs in respect of a trespass into their coal mine, the plaintiffs claimed, inter alia, an enquiry as to the amount of coal cut and taken away by the defendant and damages in respect thereof. The original defendant (a Hindu) died after the institution of the suit and thereupon his legal representative was brought on record. He contended that the cause of action did not survive as against him, relying upon S. I of Act XII of 1855.

Held that S. I of the said Act was inapplicable to the case, and that in any event, the cause of action survived under S. 89 of the Probate and Administration Act, V of 1881, which applied to Hindus, against executors and administrators. The Railway Act of 1919 was a statute passed by the Dominion Parliament in exercise of its jurisdiction over that subject. The Workmen's Compensation Act is an Act passed by the Province of Manitoba in exercise of its jurisdiction. The two enactments deal with different subjectmatters, although the circumstances of a particular case may bring it within the scope of both enactments, in which case, if a conflict arises, it is the dominion legislation which prevails. But such conflicts arise only incidentally, and the fact that they do arise is not a legitimate ground for implying words of exception in one of the sections of the Provincial Statute, excluding from its application, cases in which the Dominion Act does not apply (224). -Responsible Government-Contract by minister involving provision of funds by Parliament-Sanction of Lieutenant-Governor-Necessity-Requirites of valid contract in such cases.

Under S. 3 of the Public Works Act of British Columbia (amended in 1914), it is only the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council to whom power to enter into such a contract as that before them is given. The character of any constitution which follows, as that of British Columbia does, the type of responsible Government in the British Empire, requires that the sovereign or his representative should act on the advice of Ministers responsible to the Parliament, that is to say, should not act individually, but constitutionally. A contract which involves the provision of funds by Parliament requires, if it is to possess legal validity, that Parliament should have authorised it, either directly, or under the provisions of a statute.

Held therefore that the contract in the particular case was invalid because the Licutenant-Governor of the Province had not authorised it, and that the mere assent of the Ministers of the day to the contract could not, under a constitution, such as that of British Columbia, make the contract a legally binding one, (Viscount Haldane.) Held that even if the issue was susceptible of the wider construction contended for (namely, that stated above), yet, as the parties, by their conduct of the case, had construed it in the narrower sense of assuming the existence of a marriage, and as the claim based on the wider construction had not been submitted to either of the courts below, their

Letters of Administration granted to C in 1902 were cancelled in 1904, on the ground that he had obtained them by fraud, and Letters of Administration with the will annexed were thereupon granted to the Administrator-General of Bengal. The appellant and another were two sureties in a bond conditioned for the due administration by C of the estate of the deceased. The bond executed by them was assigned to the Administrator-General, and he brought a suit against C and the sureties (appellant and another) for the recovery of the amount misappropriated by C in his capacity as administrator under the revoked Letters of Administration

Held that the sureties, though innocent of the fraud of C, were rightly held liable by the High Court.

So long as the letters of administration granted to C remained unrevoked, C, although a rogue and an imposter, was to all intents and purposes administrator. He, and he alone, represented the deceased. His receipts were valid discharges for all moneys received by him as administrator. As administrator he collected the assets belonging to the deceased, and he misappropriated the assets, which he so collected. S, 588 of C.P.C. of 1882 enacted that appeals should lie in certain cases, which it enumerated, "and from no other such orders." This raised the question neatly, whether an appeal, expressly given by S. 15 of the Letters Patent and not expressly referred to in S. 588 of C. P. C. of 1882, could be taken away by the general words of S. 588 " and from no other such orders." The change in the wording of S. 104 of the Act of 1908 is significant, for it runs, "and, save as otherwise expressly provided . . . by any law for the time being in force, from no other orders." S. 15 of the Letters Patent is such a law, and what it expressly provides. namely, an appeal to the High Court's appellate jurisdiction from a decree of the High Court in its original ordinary jurisdiction, is thereby saved. In fact, however, the decree below was affirmed. On appeal to their Lordships a preliminary objection to the decree was raised, that cl. 36 of the Letters Patent of the High Court was not applicable; and that under Rule 26 of the Rules made by the Judges of the High Court, judgment of affirmance of the decree of the Court below ought to have been entered.

In an appeal from the High Court brought in a criminal matter under Art. 41 of the Letters Patent, it appeared that the Trial Judge reserved no question of law and the case came to the High Court on the certificate of the Advocate-General under cl. 26 of the Letters Patent. The Full Bench of the High Court, after full considertion of the point raised by that certificate, dismissed the accused's application under cl. 26. The accused thereupon preferred an appeal to the Privy Council under cl. 41 of the Letters Patent from the order of the High Court itself refusing to exercise its power to interfere with the trial and sentence.

S. 12-Contract-Money due under-Suit for-Jurisdiction-Defendant resident outside invisdiction-Contract in Madras and money payable in Madras-Leave to sue obtained.

In a suit for money alleged to be due under a contract for the sale and delivery of goods brought on the original side of the High Court of Madras, it appeared that the suit contract was made in the city of Madras, that it was agreed that the money payable under the contract was to be paid in the city of Madras, and that, the defendants being resident outside the limits of the jurisdiction of the Court, the High Court, under its Letters Patent, gave leave to the plaintiffs to bring the suit in the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Court.

Held that the suit was within the cognizance of the High Court in its ordinary original civil jurisdiction (87). (Sir John Edge.) MAHOMED KHALLEEF SHIRAZI P. LA TANNERIES LYONNAISES. (1926) 53 I. A. 84=

-8. 27-Pending proceeding - Review petition-Reference directed to be made to High Court of Calcutta on difference of opinion-Creation of Allahabad High Court before reference made-Jurisdiction of latter Court to decree review petition.

In an appeal decided by the Sudder Adawlut of the North-Western Provinces, there was an application for review. The case was heard on review in 1865 before four judges, who were equally divided in opinion. By the law, as it then stood, the judges being equally divided in opinion the case was referred for the opinion of one or more judges of the High Court of Calcutta. No reference was, however, made to the High Court of Calcutta. Under the provisions of the Statute, 24th and 25th Vict., c. 104, the Crown, by Letters Patent, dated 17th March, 1866, abolished the Sudder Court at Agra, and erected instead a High Court for the North-Western Provinces. In August, 1860, the Chief Justice of the High Court for the North-Western Provinces re-heard the petition of review and made a decree.

Held that the Chief Justice had, by the 27th section of the Letters Patent, jurisdiction to hear and decide the review petition.

No final decision having been given on review, the procoeding was a proceeding pending. Which was, therefore, to be decided by the new High Court of the North-Western Provinces (595-6). (Lord Justus Mallish.) MUSSUMAT OODEY KOONWUR 2. MUSSUMAT LABOO

B was Chowdhri of a section of Hindu caste community of which G was a member, and, in the performance of his duty as Chowdhri, B published to other members of the caste a resolution which had been passed by the panchayat of his caste section suspending social relations with G's family. In an action for libel brought by G against B, it was contended that G had no proper notice of the meeting. of the Panchayat, and that in consequence the passing of the resolution was contrary to natural justice and B was not privileged in publishing it. Held that the occasion of the publication was privileged, that the privilege was not affected by any defect in the notice and that in the absence of proof of express malice the suit failed.

To defeat or rebut privilege, the law does not recognise anything short of actual or express malice in the publication of the matter which is charged to be libellous.

The question whether and under what circumstances a person is liable for the publication of information injurious to the character of another must be decided by English law. In the absence of English authority directly in point, recourse must be had to the principle on which the law in England on the subject is founded. American authorities, though entitled to the highest respect, are inapplicable (Lord Macnaghten.) MACINTOSH v. DUN.

It fairly warranted by any reasonable occasion or exigency, and honestly made, such communications are protected for the common convenience and welfare of society and the law has not restricted the right to make them within any narrow limits.

Communications injurious to the character of another may be made in answer to enquiry or may be volunteered. If the communication be made in the legitimate defence of a person's own interest, or plainly under a sense of duty such as would be "recognised by English people of ordinary intelligence and moral principle" it cannot matter whether it is volunteered or brought out in answer to an enquiry. But in cases which are near the line, and in cases which may give rise to a difference of opinion, the circumstance that the information is volunteered is an element for consideration certainly not without some importance. subscribers as and when they had occasion to require information.

In an action for libel brought by the plaintiffs and appellants against the defendants in respect of information given by the defendants to one of their subscribers concerning the standing of the plaintiffs, held-

(1) that the defendants were to be regarded as volunteers in supplying the information which they professed to have at their disposal;

(2) that their motive in giving the information was self-interest, and not a sense of duty;

(3) that those who engaged in such a business as the defendant's, touching so closely very dangerous ground. should take the consequences if they overstepped the law;

(4) that, however convenient it might be to a trader to know all the secrets of his neighbour's position, his "standing," his "responsibility," and whatever else might be comprehended under the expression "et cetera," yet even so, accuracy of information might be brought too dearly-at least for the good of society in general.

Judgment of the Full Court of New South Wales in favour of the defendants reversed and that of the trial Judge awarding damages to plaintiffs restored. (Lord Marmaghten.) MACINTOSH v. DUN. (1908) 12 C.W.N. 1053-

-Nature of property-l'ses to which it was put by former owner and dispossesser.

To defeat a title by dispossessing the former owner acts must be done which are inconsistent with his enjoyment of the soil for the purposes for which he intended to use it and therefore it is necessary to look at the position in which the former owner stands towards the land as well as to the acts done by the alleged dispossessor. The degree of possession or dispossession that will do depends upon the nature of the property. An exclusive adverse possession for a sufficient period may be made out in spite of occasional acts done by the former owner on the ground for a specific purpose from time to time. Conversely acts which prima facie are acts of dispossession may under particular circumstances, fall short of evidencing any kind of ouster. (Lord Summer.)

In an action of ejectment brought in 1919, the question was whether the defendants had established a title to the property by adverse possession for over 12 years. It appear ed that the plaintiff's predecessor had in the year 1887 obtained (in effect) a decree entitling him to recover possession of the property, but that notwithstanding such decree the defendants and their predecessors continued in possession, and that nothing was done by the plaintiff's predectssors to disturb their (defendants') possession.

On the death of H, R, his daughter-in-law, and S, his daughter's husband, became entitled to his estate in equal moieties. Within the period allowed by the law of limitation for the purpose, S commenced a suit against Ms, who were in possession, for the whole of H's property. Pending that suit, J, who bad obtained a deed of sale from S, was substituted as plaintiff, and obtained a decree for an eight annas share. One of the defendants (R) appealed against the decree, and had it modified against her to a five annas share. The other defendants did not appeal, and the decree for eight annas became final as against them. J. executed the decree for 5 annas. In another suit B's title to two annas under the deed of gift from S was established against J. who afterwards sold to the defendants of the first suit the five annas which be had obtained, and all his right, title, and interest under the decree. The holders of the tenure contended that, even if the Zemindari right had passed to him by purchase, he had never received rents, and his claim was barred by limitation. And with reference to a compromise, under which at the close of a former litigation, a certain amount had been paid to A' as mesne profits, it was argued that the last item of the rent of the sub-tenure, entering into that sum, must have accrued more than 12 years previously.

Onus of proof of-Rule as to-Limitation Act of 1859 and later Acts-Distinction.

Under the Limitation Act of 1859 (S. 1, cl. 12), a suit for possession of immoveable property must have been brought within twelve years from the time of the cause of action; and, when the cause of action arose upon an alleged dispossession, the burden was upon the plaintiff to show that he, or some one through whom he claimed, had actual possession within twelve years before the institution of the suit. Under Art. 145 of the Limitation Act of 1171, however, such a suit may be brought within 12 years from the time when the possession of the defendant, or of some person through whom he claims, became adverse tot he plaintiff. Under that Article, therefore, it is not for the plaintiff to prove that he was in possession within the period of twelve years; it is for the defendant to show that he had twelve years' adverse possession (102). Effect of, against his minor heir.

The suit was brought by the sons of a deceased Mahomedan by one of his wives claiming that the properties in dispute were part of the inheritance of their father, in which they were entirled to share. The defendants were the sons of the deceased by another of his wives, and the purchaser of the suit property from them. The defendants contended that the suit was barred by limitation. It was found that the defendants who were the sons of the deceased were put into possession of the suit property in the lifetime of the deceased and that they continued in possession ever since.

Held that, if during the lifetime of the deceased he was out of possession and his sons (defendants) in, time legan to run in their favour against him, and the minority of the plaintiffs (his heirs) would not give them further time to sue (45-6.) The defendants claimed to hold a ghatwali tenure, from which they could not be dispossessed, on the payment of a fixed rent; and they set up the plea of limitation.

Held that Art. 144 of the Limitation Act of 1877 applied to the case, and that under that Article possession of the defendants or their predecessors in interest did not become adverse to the plaintiff or his predecessor in interest, till there was some definition or assertion of right by either party (197).

It can scarcely be contended that immediately on the creation of the sub-tenure the possession of it became adverse when there was no dispute or conflicting claim. And proceedings either between plaintiff or between defendants on the one side and creditors on the other could not be taken to show an assertion of right by either plaintiff or defend-

-Female member of-Hushand of-Property owned by, together with joint family-Possession of, by joint family when adverse to husband of female member.

A', the eldest of three brothers constituting a joint Hindu family, purchased the whole of the suit mitta in his own name. The purchase was made with the family funds and the funds of one A, the busband of a sister of the three brothers, and A was therefore entitled to an undivided fourth share therein. On the death of the three brothers, the son of one of them, the defendant's husband, who had no authority to act as manager of A's fourth share, entered into possession of the whole estate which had been in the possession of the joint family, and exclusively enjoyed the rents and profits of the entire estate.

Held that it must be presumed that at least from the time when the defendant's husband took possession after the death of his surviving uncle the possession was adverse to A and persons claiming his one-fourth share through him, and that a suit brought more than 12 years after the date the defendant's husband took such possession was barred under Art. 144 of the Limitation Act of 1877 (154). The plaintiff, the Pandara Sannadhi of the Tiruvadudurai Mutt, sued for the recovery of certain villages situated in the Madura district, alleging that he was hundar or trustee of the "Thanappa Mudali Kattalai," which was an endowment for the performance of certain ceremonies in a temple at Madura, that the suit villages formed part of that endowment, and that, therefore, as such trustee he was entitled to their possession. The defendants were the manager of the temple and the members of the temple committee appointed by the Government under Act XX of 1863. They pleaded, inter alia, that the suit was barred by limitation.

In the year 1849 the Government, which was undoubtedly then in possession of the villages in suit, handed them over to the manager of the temple at Madura (the appointment of whom was in their hands); from that time they were in the possession of such manager and the temple committee which was also appointed by Government; and the whole of the revenue from the villages had been used for the purposes of the endowment (including the expenses of the temple) according to the directions of the temple manager and the temple committee. The Pandara Sannadhi made no opposition to the villages being handed over as stated above. From 1849 forward the plaintiff had admittedly been out of possession of the suit villages.

Held that, if plaintiff had any right to claim possession in his suit, he undoubtedly had the same right in 1849, and that, as at the date of the suit, he had been out of possession of the suit villages for nearly 60 years, his claim was barred by the Indian Limitation Act (199). The suit was brought by the respondent " to declare that the defendants have no right to the village of Patharkudi, and that the plaintiff, as head of the mutt, is entitled to the possession of the village."

The village was part of the property of the mutt. It had been long administered by the appellants who were Nagara Chettys. Broadly speaking, the contest in the case was between the head of the muth on the one hand, who claimed in virtue of his office to be entitled to the management and possession of the entire property of the muth; while, on the other hand, the appellants claimed that they were entitled as trustees or managers of the part of the property of the institution which was in suit to be continued in the possession and management thereof. The form of the action brought was a suit for possession instituted by the head of the muth, who did not have that possession, against the trustees or managers, who and whose predecessors for a period of 80 years had it.

Held, that the suit was excluded by the 12 years' limita-

In L. R. 10 1. A. 90 it was held that limitation applied to cases where the defended admitted he was a trustee, and the plaintiff, without proving misapplication, brought a suit more than 12 years after the cause of action arose, the object of the suit being to obtain control of the management. The present case is still stronger for the application of the rule of limitation, as the assertion is made not only of the right to management, but of the right of beneficial ownership (225). Standing a title in " A," the alleged adverse possession necessary. of "B" must have all the qualities of adequacy, continuity, and exclusiveness which should qualify such adverse possession. But the onus of establishing these things is upon the adverse possessor. Accordingly when the holder of title proves that he too has been exercing during the currency of his title various acts of possession, then the quality of these acts, even although they might have failed to constitute adverse possession as against another, may be abundantly sufficient to destroy that adequacy and interrupt that exclusiveness and continuity which is demanded from any person challenging by possession the title which he holds (404). ——Conditional sale—Mortgage by—Possession of mortgager under—Effect against mortgagee—Old and new notions of mortgage by conditional sale—Distinction.

As long as a transaction of conditional sale was one of sale conditional at first, and absolute at a certain period afterwards by lapse of time, unless, on the prior performance of a certain condition (e.g. payment of money), the title to the land was on that condition terminating in favour of the conditional purchaser, the same as that of any ordinary owner, and a possession frima facie irreconcilable with it, might well be deemed adverse from the date of the completion of the perfect title in the buyer. But if the transaction be viewed, as it should now be regarded, as one redeemable at any time by the mostgagor, or those claiming under him in privity with his title as mortgagor, the possession of those who claim under the mortgagor, so long as they assert a title to redeem, and advance no other title inconsistent with it, must prima facie at least be treated as perfectly reconcilable with, and not adverse to, the title of the mortgagee, and the continuation of his lien on the thing pledged. It is by no means the essence of such a title that it should be accompanied by an actual continuing possession of the lands. The pledgee may, from various causes, he reluctant to assume possession of the pledge, or to shorten the period of its redeemable quality. So possession is adverse or not according to the title so set up. (Lord Kingsdown.) PRANNATH ROY CHOWDRY +. ROOKEA (1859) 7 M.I. A. 323 (353-4) = 4 W. R. 37 = 1 Suth. 367 = 1 Sar. 692.

-Equity of relemption-Execution purchaser of. benamidar for mortgagee-Exclusive possession by-Effect.

The question was whether a suit for redemption was barred by adverse possession for more than 12 years by the purchasers at execution sales of the equity of redemption.

The circumstances relied on as evidence of adverse possession were: that since the dates of the execution sales no accounts were demanded by or rendered to the mortgagors or their representatives, no payments of subsistence money which they were entitled to under the mortgage were made to them, and the parties after the sale ceased to cultivate the land and left the village, and renewed pattas were granted to nominees of the mortgagees.

It appeared, however, that in each case the nominal purchasers were the agents only of the mortgagees, or the firm of which they were members, who were the real purchasers, that as changes took place from time to time in the constitution of the firm, the mortgaged property as an asset of the firm was credited at an agreed figure in favour of an outgoing or against an incoming partner, and that there were no separate dealings with the equity of redemption as a distinct subject of property.

Held, that the possession had been that of the mortgagees throughout, and that the question at issue was exclusively one between mortgagor and mortgagee (33), If the purchasers had been independent third parties, and accounts had been rendered and payments made by the mortgagees to them instead of to the mortgagors, the circumstances relied on would have been cogent evidence of adverse possession of the equity of redemption in favour of such third parties (32).

It is almost unnecessary to add that a renewal of the pattas or the making of a new settlement with Government in the names of nominees of the mortgagees did not alter the real title to the lands (33). (Lord Dascy.) KHIARIMAL t. DAIM. (1904) 32 I.A. 23 = 32 C. 296 (311.2) =

As between mortgagor and mortgagee, neither exclusive possession by the mortgagee for any length of time short of the statutory period of 60 years, nor any acqueiscence by the mortgagor not amounting to a release of the equity of redemption, will be a bar or defence to a suit for redemption if the parties are otherwise entitled to redeem (33). In a suit for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage of 1846, the defendant set up the defence that he purchased the mortgaged property from a person who had no title to convey the same and that his enjoyment thereof for over the statutory period conferred on him a title by adverse possession. It was found that the defendant was the son of the mortgagee under the suit mortgage, that at the date of the suit mortgage the defendant and his father formed a joint Hindu family governed by the law of the Benares School of the Mithakshara, that the defendant had, however, ceased to be joint in food and in business with his father prior to the date of his purchase of the suit property, and that the purchase was made by him with his separate and self-acquired funds,

Held, that the defendant was not, under the circumstances, precluded from setting up a title of adverse possession. (Str John Edge.) PARBATI v. MUZAFFAR ALI KHAN.

Plaintiff, on 19.9-1873, surd the respondent (before the Privy Council) and others to recover a twelve annas share, and to eject the respondent from his possession of the lands in suit, on the allegation that they were mal or rent-paying lands to which plaintiff was entitled, and of which his step-brother, S, held possession in 1864, alleging them to be lakhiraj or rent-free lands and claiming to be entitled to them. Respondent contended that the suit lands were purchased by him in an execution sale as belonging to S as lakhiraj lands, that plaintiff had no title thereto, and that, as the lands had never been held by anybody as a rent-paying part of the Zemindary, the claim was barred by limitation. It appeared that, originally, plaintiff had a ten! annas share in the estate, his father had a two annas share, and his half-brother, S, a four annas share that their enjoyment of the property was, upto the year, 1839, ijmali or joint; that in 1839 a butwara (family arrangement) took place under which the different villages constituting the estate were divided, plaintiff taking solely certain villages as his ten annas share, and his father and S taking jointly certain other villages as representing their six annas share; and that on the death of his father in 1842, his two annas share also became vested in plaintiff. In 1856, 5's four annas share of the estate was sold in execution of a decree obtained against him by N and purchased by him (N). S resisted N's attempt to take possession and thereupon N instituted a suit in 1858 against, inter alia, S and plaintiff to enforce his rights. By the first judgment in that suit. dated 3-12-1860, it was decided not only that the four annas share had continued to be the property of S at the date of the execution, and had passed under the sale in execution, but further that the butwara, which had been pleaded by plaintiff, had not been proved against and was not binding on N, and that he was accordingly entitled to hold the four annas share of S purchased by him in ifmali enjoyment with plaintiff. S, but not plaintiff, appealed against the decree and his appeal was finally disposed of only on 19-6-1863. Execution was then taken out by A against S, and the heirs of N, who had died in the meantime, did not obtain constructive possession of 5's 4 annas till July 1864. S then set up a title to hold as lakhiraj the lands in question in the suit of plaintiff, which had formed part of the villages allotted by the butwara, as the six annas share, treating them as no part of the khalisha lands, his interest wherein had passed under the execution.

Held, the date on which A's herrs were put into posses sion, or at all events the date of the dismissal of the appeal was the earliest at which it could be said that the title of plaintiff to the relief which he sought in his suit accrued, and not 3-12-18(0), the date of the first judgment; and the suit, which was instituted within 12 years from the date of the Appellate judgment, was not barred under Art. 145 of the Limitation Act of 1871.

The effect of the decree in N's suit, in so far as it set aside the partition, was to give him a right to take from the plaintiff four annas of the rents of all the villages previously allotted to him, and to give to the plaintiff a corresponding equity or right to have the twelve annas of the rents of the villages which had formerly belonged to S. The plaintiff was not bound to assert this right in 1860, because S having appealed against the decree, there was of course a possibility of its being reversed or altered, and of N's suit being dismissed altogether. It was therefore uncertain against whom the right to receive the twelve annas share of the villages in question was to be asserted; nor did it follow that because the butwara or family arrangement had been declared to be of no effect as between N and the present plaintiff, it was of no effect as between the plaintiff and his brother who were co-defendants in A's suit. Again, no attempt was made by N to take out execution pending the appeal, and it may fairly be supposed that by arrangement between the brothers there was an agreement that the property should continue to be enjoyed as it had been under the partition. In these circumstances even if technically the lands now in question remained, pending the appeal, in S, there was no necessity or duty lying upon the plaintiff to assert his rights in those lands until A's heirs were put into possession, or at all events until the rights of the parties had been finally determined by the dismissal of the appeal. These considerations are alone sufficient to bring the plaintiff's ceedings-Stranger-Distinction,

A decree of the year 1873 awarded to the appellant certain lands as belonging to the village A. Possession was given in September, 1876, the lands having been judicially ascertained but not demarcated. In 1877 he sued the respondent in the Civil Court for possession of alluvial lands as belonging to village R, and included therein some land already decreed to him belonging to village A, but the suit was dismissed. He then sued in the Revenue Courts, with the result that the exact lands adjudged under the decree of 1873 were demarcated and the respondent was found to be in possession of part thereof, but denied the jurisdiction of the Revenue Courts to oust him. In February, 1886, the appellant sued for possession of certain lands belonging to village A, and adjudged to him by the decree of 1873.

Held that the suit was not barred by limitation, as the land which accrued to the appellant under the compromise was not ascertained till the proceedings in 1876, and June 1876, was the very earliest time at which a right to recover the land in suit accrued to the appellant, and that was less than twelve years before the reception of the plaint (715). A char which was found to be a re-formation in sitn of plaintiff's land was occupied for some years by Government. It was then claimed by defendants as their property and Government made over possession to them. In a suit by plaintiffs to recover possession, held that the defendants could not, to make out their plea of adverse possession, tack on the period of Government's possession to their own occupation.

The defendants do not derive their liability to be sued "from or through" the Revenue Authorities in any sense of the words within the meaning of §. 3 of the Limitation Act. They advanced a claim of their own adversely to the Revenue Authorities, which was rested on prior title and possession, and sought to put an end to conduct on the part of those authorities which, they asserted, was inconsistent with and an invasion of their own superior title. On investigation the Revenue authorities recognised and submitted to this adverse claim and withdrew from any enjoyment or occupation. If the defendants could make good now the claim which they made then, well and good; but they would succeed, not by reason of, but independently of, the Limitation Act. (Lord Summer.) ### UNDER-PROPRIETARY RIGHT.

Person not in fact entitled to Aquisition of right by adverse possession by Assertion of right in indicial proceedings and lapse of 6 or 12 years without assertion being successfully challenged if amounts to,

The respondent held certain land in a village appertaining to the estate of the appellant, an Oudh talukdar. As far back as the year 1891 the appellant issued a notice of ejectment under Ss. 54 and 55 of the Oudh Rent Act of 1886 against the respondent. The latter thereupon instituted proceedings under S. 108 of that Act to contest the said notice on the ground that he was not a tenant liable to ejection by notice under the Act but was an under-proprietor thereunder. In those proceedings final judgment was pronounced by the Board of Revenue in 1892 or 1893 cancelling the notice of ejectment on the ground that there was reasonable ground for supposing that the respondent was an under-proprietor and not a tenant subject to ejectment under the Act. The respondent continued in possession making to the appellant the same money payment as before, till 1913, when he instituted the suit out of which the appeal arose for a declaration that he was an under-proprietor.

It was proved that he was not in fact such, and the only question was whether he had become so by adverse posses-

Held, over-ruling the respondent's contention, that the simple assertion of a proprietary right in a judicial proceeding connected with the land in dispute which ex hypothesi was unfounded at the date when it was made, could not, by the mere lapse of 6 or 12 years, convert what was an occupancy or tenant title into that of an under-proprietor.

Their Lordships are unable to affirm as a general proposition of law that a person who is, in fact, in possession of land under a tenancy or occupancy title can, by a mere assertion in a judicial proceeding and the lapse of six or twelve years without that assertion having been successfully challenged, obtain a title as an under-proprietor to the lands Such a judgment might have very far-reaching results and would almost certainly lead to a flood of litigation. It is notorious that in actions for rent or enhancement of rent or for ejectment, the persons in possession are prone to maintain rights which they do not possess, and if, for any reason, no judicial determination is arrived at, but the parties contime on the original footing, the mere lapse of so short a period as 6 or 12 years (which might be amply explained upon other grounds) would deprive the landlord of his proprietary rights unless in the meantime he had brought a declaratory suit to settle once and for all the terms on which possession was held (208-9),

The case might have been different, if in addition to the judicial assertion by the plaintiff there had been any change in the money payment which he thereafter made to his land-lord (209). (Lord Salvesen.) MAHOMED MURTAZ ALI KHAN v. MOHAN SINGH. (1923) 50 I. A. 202=

-The respondents claimed to be under-proprietors. In 1893 an attempt was made to eject them from the suit holdings, and in those proceedings they asserted that their right was that of an under proprietor. Their exact position was, however, then left wholly undetermined. Thy persisted in that assertion until the institution of the proceedings out of which the appeal to the Privy Council arose, that is, for over the the statutory period. They completely failed to show that their original right was an under-proprietary right.

Held, reversing the Courts below, that the respondents had not acquired an under proprietary right by prescription.

The repeated assertion of under proprietary rights during the statutory period applicable for a Statute of Limitations cannot convert a title which was not that of under-proprietary tenant into that of under proprietary tenant merely by lapse of time. ## Damages for injury to person and property.

-Suit for, based on legal title-Limitation-Regl. XXXVI of 1802-Applicability-Statement in plaint that suit is founded on that Regl.-Effect-Suit tried in Court below as one upon title.

In a suit for damages for injuries inflicted by the defendant on plaintiffs and on their property, the plaint was really framed upon the legal title to redress, both for the injury to the person and for the injuries to the land, and for taking away personal property. The suit was also sub-sequently conducted as a regular suit. The plaint had, however, stated that the damages therein claimed in pursuance of and according to Regulation XXXII of 1802, which was to give redress to persons whose goods had been taken away without their producing a proof of their title, and which provided a period of 1 year after the injury sustained for a suit brought under that Regulation.

On appeal to the Privy Council against the decree of the Court below awarding compensation to the plaintiffs, it was contended that, as the suit had been brought beyond the period of 1 year provided by the Regulation, the decree

Held, that the objection was wholly unavailing (512). The statement in the plaint that it was founded upon the Regulation was a mere superfluity (512). (Mr. Baron Parke.) RAJAH PEDDA VENCATAPPA NAIDOO BAHADUR

S. 7-Operation of -Exclusion from-Conditions. A plaintiff who during the period of prescription is resident out of the territories under the Government of the East India Company is within the express provision of S. 7 of the Statute, 21 James I, C. 16 and the Statute would be no bar to a suit brought by him. It is no answer to say, that he might sue or he sued during the whole time, by reason of a constructive inhabitancy, i.e., by reason of his carrying on business within the territories by a Gomastha, an inhabitant of Bombay, and subject to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Bombay. That might probably give the Court jurisdiction, but will not prevent the express operation of S. 7. A plaintiff may be in England for 6 years, but, nevertheless, if he be in prison when the cause of action arises, during the whole period, he may sue when he comes out of prison, notwithstanding that he might have conmenced an action at any moment whilst he was in prison, if he had so thought fit. The words of S. 7 are express, and the plaintiff is within them (260). (Sir John Jervit.) HER HIGHNESS RUCKMABOYE P. LULLOOBHOY (1852) 5 M. I. A. 234= MOTICHUND. 8 Moo. P. C. 4=1 Sar. 423.

The suit was to recover possession of certain villages by redemption of a mortgage executed in 1863 by plaintiff's father. The defendant purchased the villages in 1904 from the Nawab of Rampur, to whom the mortgagees, acting as absolute owners, had mortgaged, and had subsequently sold them, in 1898 and 1903 respectively. On the hearing before the High Court the defendants for the first time raised the defence that they were entitled to succeed by reason of the provisions of Art. 134 of the Limitation Act of 1908. No evidence had been given in the Court below to support the plea, and such evidence must have included all the documents of mortgage and sale which had not been proved or printed. Nevertheless the learned Judges of the High Court came to the conclusion that, as there could be no doubt as to the material facts and as the necessary documents had been printed before in a case previously decided by the Privy Council they should allow the point to be argued.

A Hindu, subject to the Bombay Mithakshara law, died leaving several undivided sons. Within a year of his death in 1872, one of his sons brought a suit against his brothers for a partition of the family properties, moveable and immoveable. The defendants pleaded that the suit as to the moveable properties was barred under S. 1, cl. (13) of the Limitation Act of 1859, because the plaintiff had received no payment thereout since 1858,

It appeared that the plaintiff had, during the lifetime of his father, brought a suit in 1861 against the father and the defendants (his brothers) for a partition of the family moveable and immoveable properties, and that that suit had been dismissed, as regards the moveable properties, on the ground that the plaintiff had no right to compel his father in his lifetime to make a partition of moveable, though it might be ancestral, properties.

MAINTAINABILITY OF-ESTOPPEL-(Contd.)

Held, that the defendants were estopped by the proceedings in the suit of 1861 from setting up the statute as a bar to the plaintiff's claim (193).

Their Lordships treat the order in the suit of 1861, whether founded on a correct or an erroneous view of the law, as an adjudication, binding on the parties to that suit, that the plaintiff was not entitled to sue in his father's lifetime for a partition of the moveable property and consequently could not assert his rights in that property until his father's death. It would be in the highest degree unjust to allow the defendants, who had for years the benefit of that judgment, to insist that it did not suspend the running of the Statute of Limitations because it was erroneous in point of law, and the plaintiff ought to have appealed from it (193). The suit was by a person claiming to be the heir-at-law of a deceased Mahomedan against, inter alia, the respondent seeking to obtain possession of the real and personal estate of the deceased from the respondent, who, the plaintiff alleged, was not the wedded wife of the decased. It was found by the courts is low and their Lordships that the repondent was the weded wife of the deceased, and that she was entitled to dower under a deed of dower executed on her marriage. The plaintiff did not before the Sudder Ameen plead that the respondent's claim to dower was barred under S. 14 of the Regulation of Limitation III of 1793. He took the objection only in the Sudder Court and again before their Lordships.

Their Lordships observed : considering that it is an objection by the plaintiff against the defendant, that might perhaps be a ground for refusing to entertain it (228). (Lord Justice Knight Bruce.) AMEER OON-NISSA E. MOORAD-OON NISSA. (1855) 6 M. I. A. 211-1 Sar. 533.

In 1810, the plaintiff's father, in consideration of a further advance, executed another instrument, purporting to convey the villages to the defendant absolutely. The plaintiff's father died more than 12 years before suit. Under Reg. The duty of the Government in this respect was a public and perpetual duty within the meaning of S. 2 of Reg. Held that the suit was not barred by limitation (422-3). The plaintiff had no right of action against the defendant till his appointment in 1819, and the defendant could acquire no right against the Government, whose procurator the plaintiff was, at least until twelve years had elapsed from his appointment (422 3). Two owners of an estate in which they had equal shares having agreed to collect the rents through a collector appointed by the Court, appeared both of them to have collected and received sums in the mofussil from the local agent of the collector and sometimes from the tenants. The circumstances all went to show that their receipts were not receipts which could be alleged to be receipts by a tenant in common antagonistic to his other tenant in common, but that they were all part and parcel of a common arrangement by which the whole of the rents were to be received by the agent, or by the party acting under the authority or with the tacit assent of the agent, the separate collection of each party having to be dealt with as if received from the agent or Collector.

Held, that the statute of limitation could not apply to a claim by one of the owners against the other as for the collections made during twelve years previous to the institution of the suit, one party having received more one year and less the previous year, and that it would be absolutely necessary in taking the accounts from any date to see what the state of things was between them at that date. Applicability of Act to.

The Limitation Act of 1859, after prescribing particular terms of limitation for certain actions, enacts by S. I, cl. (16), with respect to all suits and actions not before specifically provided for the term of six years shall apply, that is, six years from the time when the cause of action accrued. Their Lordships are of opinion that the provisions of that Act do not apply to suits for divorce a vinculo which at the time when it was passed were unknown in India. Where, in a suit for a partition of family property brought by one of the sons of a deceased Hindu subject to the Bombay Mithakshara law against his (plaintiff's) undivided brothers, it appeared that the suit was to establish the right of the plaintiff as a co-parcener not only as to his original share in the joint estate, but also as to the moiety of the father's interest to which he became entitled on his father's death by right of survivorship, and to have a partition on that basis, their Lordships observed that they were not prepared to affirm that on the facts of the case before them the father might not be held to be "the person from whom the property alleged to be joint is said to have descended within the meaning of S. 1, cl. 13 of the Limitation Act of 1859 (191).

So far as the father's interest is concerned, the succession opened only on the father's death. -Applicability-Mortgage by one member-Redemp tion of-Suit by another for, on ground of mortgaged property being joint family property.

S. 13 of the Limitation Act of 1859, which speaks of suits for enforcing the right to share in any property moveable or immoveable, on the ground that it is joint family, property, deals with suits between one or some member or members of the joint family and some other members of the joint family complaining of what would be termed in England an ouster of some members by others, or of a failure by the member in occupation to account for profits, or to pay maintenance where it is due. The section has no application to a suit by the plaintiffs for redemption of a mortgage made by A on the ground that A was the member of a joint family, joint as regards the mortgaged property, and that they, the plaintiffs, were the other members of that joint family, and that the mortgage was made either with their previous approbation, or their subsequent assent (14).

The circumstance that it is not the whole of the members of the joint family, but only some who now come to recover their share of the property, does not make this a dispute in any way between members of the joint family as to the question of, whether the property is joint or not. It is merely a question of the title of the plaintiffs to redeem, and the question of joint or not joint property has only to be decided incidentally for the purpose of establishing that a payment in respect of their shares by the defendant,

S. 5-(Conta.)

The provisions of S. 5 of Act XIV of 1859 are of an extremely stringent kind. They take away and cut down the title which ex hypothesi is a good title, of the cestui que trust or of a person who has deposited, pawned, or mortgaged property. They cut down that title in regard to the number of years that the person would have had a right to assert it-from a very great length of time, sixty years, they cut it down to 12 years. It is therefore only proper that any person claiming the benefit of this section should clearly and distinctly show that he fills the position of the person contemplated by this section as the person who ought to be protected. In order to claim the benefit of this section the defendant must show three things : first, that he is the purchaser according to the proper meaning of that term; second, that he is a bona fide purchaser; and third, that he is a purchaser for valuable consideration [Quotation from 14 M. If and when purchaser within meaning of section.

A purchaser within the meaning of S. 5 of the Limitation Act of 1859 cannot be a person who purchases a mortgage as a mortgage, because that would be merely equivalent to an assignment of a mortgage; it would be the case of a person taking a mortgage with a clear and distinct understanding that it was nothing more than a mortgage. It, therefore, must mean some person who purchases that which de facto is a mortgage upon a representation made to him and in the full belief that it is not a mortgage but an absolute title (15-6). plea are not matters of technicality,—they are matters of substance. In pleading a purchase for valuable consideration the very first averment in the plea is, that the person selling either was seized, or alleged that he was seized, for an absolute title, and then the plea goes on to say, that being so seized, or alleging that he was so seized, he contracted to sell, and did sell and convey that absolute title, asserting it to be such, to the purchaser, who paid his money for that which was thus sold. (17).

Where, in a suit to redeem a mortgage or conditional sale, the defendant's plea was perfectly consistent with his being nothing more than the transferee of that which was a conditional sale, or a title by way of mortgage, and the evidence adduced by him was also to that effect, held that he was not entitled to the benefit of S. 5 (19-20). 3.6 Applicability—Mortgages who had forestoned —Suit for possession by—Limitation—Cause of action—Defendant purchaser of property prior to forcelosure proceedings and not made party thereto—Suit after 12 years from date of default giving right of re-entry to mortgages.

Plaintiff was a mortgagee under a mortgage in the English form, with the usual proviso for redemption, and a proviso that the mortgagor should continue in possession until default, and that on default the mortgagee was to have an express right of entry. The plaintiff instituted proceedings to foreclose the mortgagor and obtained a foreclosure decree absolute.

The defendant claimed under a purchase from the mortgagor of the mortgaged property prior to the said proceedings for foreclosure. Registration and mutation of names in the Collector's Book, and possession followed upon the said purchase. The defendant was not, however, made a party to the foreclosure proceedings.

More than 12 years after the purchase under which the defendant claimed, and more than 12 years after the default conferring the right of entry upon the mortgagee within the meaning of the proviso in the mortgage deed, the plaintiff instituted a suit to recover the mortgaged property from the defendant. The defendant contended that the suit was barred by limitation, relying upon S. 1, cl. 12 of the Limi-tation Act of 1859. The plaintiff contended, on the other hand, that so long as the mortgage security was a subsisting security, and dealt with as such, time did not run as between the mortgagee, who was content to rest on his security, and the mortgagor, who was permitted to remain in possession, and persons claiming under him; and that until the foreclosure put an end to the security it was a subsisting security, and that it was then, and not till then, that time began to run. It was further contended that the defendant, who claimed under a purchase from the mortgagor, could not be in a more favourable position than the mortgagor himself. The plaintiff relied upon S. 6 of the Limitation Act of 1859.

Held that S, 6 was inapplicable to the case (149).

It is impossible to hold that the defendant, the purchaser, was holding or supposed that he was holding by the permission of the mortgagee; and when both things concur—possession by such a holder for more than 12 years, and the right of entry under the mortgage deed more than 12 years old—it is impossible to say that such a possession is not protected by the law of limitations (150). It may have been deemed necessary to introduce the exception in S. 6 of the Limitation Act of 1859 in order to put the mortgages in the English form, when put in suit in the Supreme Court, which was generally governed by English law, upon the same footing as that in which English mortgages are under the existing statutes of Limitation, and their Lordships, dealing with suits upon mortgages in the Native Courts of India, might, in the simple case of a mortgager and his mortgagor being permitted to remain in possession so long as he paid interest, have found ground for considering that there was a permissive possession, and that a new cause of action and right of entry accrued when that permission ceased (150). -Object and necessity of.

It is not surprising that, in framing the Limitation Act of 1859, a law designed to be common to both systems of judicature (172., the Courts of the East India Company which he called the Mofussil Courts, and the Courts established in the Presidency Towns and elsewhere by Royal ( harter), it was deemed necessary to make certain exceptions to the general rule of uniformity. And it may be presumed that, in dealing with this matter of execution of decrees, the Lagislature was moved by certain reasons which approved themselves to the minds of those who were conversant with the administration of justice in the Mofussil, to subject the execution of the decrees of the Mofuscil Courts, whether of appellate or of original jurisdiction to the three years' limitation; whilst, on the other hand, being pressed by the weight and value which the law of England gives to a judgment or decree of a Superior Court, it determined not to reduce the period for enforcing the decrees of the Supreme Coarts to less than 12 years. Hence the distinction made by Ss 19 and 20 of the Limitation Act of 1859, in which the term "Coarts established by Royal Charter" was obviously used not by reason of anything inherent in every Coart established by Royal Charter, but simply because it was thought to define certain existing Coarts, ziz., the Supreme Coarts in the three Presidency Towns, and the Recorders' Coarts in the Straits Settlements, and possibly to include other Coarts of similar constitution and functions, which might thereafter be established (485). ### CONSTRUCTION OF.

S. 20—The meaning of S. 20 of the Limitation Act of 1859 is that no process of execution should be issued to enforce a judgment or order of a Court not established by royal charter, after the expiration of 3 years from the date of it, unless some proceeding to enforce it, or to keep it in force, should have been taken within 3 years next before the application for execution (134). HEIRS OF JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—APPLICATION FOR EXECUTION AGAINST—HEARING AND DISPOSAL OF, BY STRIKING OFF CASE FOR THE PRESENT.

- Application within b years of order disposing of it-Not barred.

The question was whether there was at any time within three years preceding the application for execution out of which the appeal arose any proceeding which had been taken to keep in force the judgment, decree, or order originally made in favour of the appellant.

The original judgment-debtor died. The appellant desired to have the benefit of his judgment against the heir, or heir-at-law of the debtor. In that state of things he applied to the Judge for process of execution against the respondents as heirs, and on 26 12 1861, that application was made to assume the form of a cause. It was marked and described as No. 106 of 1861, and was sent by the Judge to the Principal Sudder Ameen, who directed the usual notices to issue.

On 24 1-1862, the Nazir of the Court made his report that another Officer, a Peon, had gone to the place stated, and searched for the Judgment-debtors, but was unable to find them, and had affixed the notice in a particular way, and served it upon the village watchman. Then, in February, 1862, the respondents filed a petition of objections before the Principal Sudder Ameen, not disputing the service of the notice, but objecting to execution proceeding on the grounds. that it was barred by limitation, and that no estate of the Judgment debtor had come into their possession. In March, 1862, without any delay, the appellant put in a petition by way of answer to the petition which the respondents had put in contesting the allegations in point of law that the respondents had made. In that state of things, both parties having placed their view of their respective cases upon record, on 4-3-1862, the Principal Sudder Ameen ordered that on the last petition, if there were no objection, the notice of sale should be drawn up in due order; and, following upon that, on 29-11-1862, a species of hearing was brought on before the Principal Sudder Ameen, for the purpose of discussing all or some of the allegations which had been made in those petitions, and it was then, upon that day, 29-11-1862, that the Principal Sudder Ameen pronoun-ccd his opinion as follows:—"Whereas the heir of the Judgment-debtor is a respectable woman, the final process cannot be issued against her. Let the number of the suit be struck off from this record, at present."

Held that, assuming that the order of 29-11-1862 was meant to be a final judgment, there was a proceeding to keep in force a judgment, decree, or order originally made within the meaning of S. 20 of the Limitation Act of 1859; that that proceeding was pending every day of the time until it was disposed of on 29-11-1862, by the order of that date (487-8).

It was at this point (the order of 29-11-1862), and at this point for the first time, that the suit, which up to that time had been pending, was disposed of by any order of the Court, and up to that time there appears certainly to have been no delay on the part of either side. It was prosecuted homa hde, and defended homa hde; and it appears to their Lordships, that so long as that process was going on, so long as there were these allegations and counter-allegations, as to the right to revive and prosecute the decree, there was a pending proceeding, and it would have been out of the power of the appellant to have done anything but wait for the result and the order of the Court upon that pending proceeding (487 8). -Bona fide nature of-Test-Evidence.

In considering whether certain execution proceedings were bona fide or not within the meaning of S. 20 of the Limitation Act of 1859 the Court ought not to confine itself to one particular attempt to revive execution, but must look at the whole course of the proceedings (930).

Where it appeared that the first proceeding to obtain execution was not only prosecuted, but prosecuted with effect, and a large sum obtained, and that in the third attempt, when the defendant set up the defence of limitation and attempted to bar the proceeding, the decree-holder opposed him, and successfully opposed him, in two Courts, going to the High Court, held that, the case afforded strong evidence of a homa fide desire on the part of the decree-holder to execute his decree, which was thwarted and baffled by the defendant (930). PROCEEDING TO ENFORCE DECREE—(Contd.)

Mistaken and ineffectual but bona fide proceeding-Colorable proceeding-Distinction.

A petition presented bona fide by a decree-holder for execution in one suit of money attached in another suit is a proceeding taken within the meaning of S. 20, Act XIV, 1859, to enforce or keep in force a decree. The fact that it was in the end abortive, does not take from it the character of a proceeding to enforce the decree.

It is said that this proceeding cannot be held to be one to keep the judgment in force, because it was a petition to obtain execution of a sum of money which it was not possible that the execution could reach, and that that must have been so to the knowledge of the decree-holder. It seems to their Lordships that these circumstances really affect only the bona fider of the proceedings. If their Lordships could infer from these facts that the petition was a colorable one, not really with a view to obtain the money; if they could come to that conclusion, in point of fact, the proceeding would not be one contemplated by the Statute; but their Lordships cannot come to that conclusion. The fact that the petition was in the end abortive does not take from it the character of a proceeding to enforce the decree. The consequence will be that the date on which the petition was dismissed (and not that on which it was presented) is the date from which the three years ought to commence to run. -Privy Council appeal-Petition by both parties pending, for stay of proceedings to effect compromiss-Dismissal of appeal subsequently for default-Petition for tay if a proceeding within meaning of section.

A decree made by a Mofusil Court in March 1862, was affirmed on appeal by the High Court in June, 1863. An appeal from the High Court was interposed to the Queen in Council, and pending such appeal a petition by both parties was presented in April, 1865, to stay proceedings for two months to effect a compromise, which did not take place, and afterwards, in the same year, no steps having been taken, the High Court, in May, 1866, struck out the appeal. In 1867, the decree holder applied to the lower Court for execution of the decree, but that Court refused to issue three years' limitation, provided by S. 20 of Act XIV of 1859, and its decision was affirmed on appeal by the High Court.

Held that, when the parties consented to the petition to stay proceedings there was such a contestatio litio touching the appeal to England as constituted "some proceeding," provided for by S. 20 of Act XIV of 1859, and took the vided by that section (494-5). S. 20 of the Limitation Act of 1859 does not say some proceeding in a Court having jurisdiction, and their Lordships are of opinion that a proceeding taken bona fide and with due diligence before a Judge whom the party hwa fide believes, though errone susly, to have jurisdiction, especially when the Judge himself also supposes that he has jurisdiction, and deals with the case accordingly, is a proceeding to enforce the decree within the meaning of S. 20 (171). The fact that the judgment-debtors did not appear or object to the jurisdiction is immaterial (172).

On the 5th of October 1866, the appellants obtained a decree for money against the respondent. Subsequently to the decree the defendant made various payments on account up to the month of October, 1869. On the 22nd of that month the appellants presented a petition to the Deputy Commissioner (who passed the decree), claiming a balance for principal and interest, and praying that, as after certainpt the amount to be recovered, a as:ertificate might be sent to the civil Court at Meerut, transferring the decree, in order that it might be executed in that Court. The Deputy Commissioner rejected the petition on the ground that, as the Commissioner's sanction for execution had not been obtained, it was not within his power to execute the decree. The application of the 22nd of October was admittedly made bona fide.

The Defendant, notwithstanding the order, made further payments on account.

On 4th May, 1871, the plaintiff, alleging that the payments made were not sufficient to cover the interest, and claiming a balance, made a fresh application to the Deputy Commissioner for a certificate and transfer of the decree to the Court of Meerut for execution. That application was ultimately rejected by the Chief Court on the ground that the decree having been obtained before the introduction of the Limitation Act of 1859 into the Punjah, the case was governed by the provisions of S. 21, and not by S. 20, of that Act, and that the application was barren.

The Limitation Act of 1859 was extended to the Punjab on the 1st of January 1867, and consequently the period of 3 years from the time when the Act came into operation in the Punjab had expired before the application of the 4th of May, 1871, was made.

Held, reversing the Court below, that the application made to the Deputy Commissioner on the 22nd of October, 1869, being bona tole, though unsuccessful, was a proceeding to enforce the judgment within the meaning of S, 20 of the Act of 1859; and that that proceeding having been taken within 3 years next preceding the application made on the 4th of May, 1871, such last mentioned application was not barred by S. 21 of the Act of 1859, and ought to have been granted (136). -Summary decision - Meaning - Registration Act XX of 1866-S. 53-Decree made under-If a summary deci-

Summary decision means a decision arrived at by a summany proceeding, and the decision being called a decree does not make any difference in this respect (125).

A "decree" made under S. 53 of Act XX of 1866 is a "summary decision" within the meaning of S. 22 of the Limitation Act of 1859 (125).

Act XX of 1866 does, indeed, say that the petitioner shall be entitled to a decree, and that such decree may be enforced under the provisions for the enforcement of decrees contained in the Code of Civil Procedure. It was held by the High Court at Calcutta, in Ram Dhun Mundul v. Rameswar Bhuttacharjee, (2 B.L.R. 235), that the words "summary decision or award" meant a decision of the civil courts not being a decree made in a regular suit or appeal. This construction appears to have been adopted by the Indian Legislature in the Limitation Act IX of 1871, in Art. 166 of the 2nd Schedule, where one year is stated as the period of limitation for the execution of the decision (other than a decree or order passed in a regular suit or an appeal) of a civil court or an appeal. Here the exception shews that the word "decision" is used as including a decree (125). (Sir Richard Couch.) MINA KONWARI v. JUGGUT SETANI. The Limitation Act of 1871 contains two sets of provisions, which are in their nature distinct. One relates to the limitation of suits, and prescribes the limitation of time for bringing suits after the right to sue has arisen. The other set relates to the manner of acquiring title and rights by possession and enjoyment. The latter provisions are contained in Part 4 of the Act, and are introduced under the heading "Acquisition of ownership by possession." -Art. 129-Adoption of 1851-Setting uside of-Limitation for-Act Applicable - Act of 1871 or 1877.

The suit was in substance to set aside the adoption of the defendant. That adoption was made in the year 1851. The suit was brought in 1885. The plaintiff came of age in 1861 2, and the defendant in 1872-3. The period of 12 years after the defendant's adoption expired in 1863, and eight years more had elapsed when the Limitation Act of 1871 was passed. That Act came into force on the 1st of April, 1873.

Held that the Limitation Act of 1871 applied to the case, and that no suit having been brought to set aside the adoption on the 1st of April, 1873, the plaintiff's right of action was barred (37).

The plaintiff had upwards of two years after March, 1871, when the Act of 1871 received the assent of the Governor-General within which he might have brought his suit to set aside the adoption, and had notice under the statute that the period of limitation of twelve years from the date of the adoption would be applicable on the expiry of that time (57). -Adoption of 1851-Suit for possession against adopted son in 1885-Latter's assertion of status and rights of adopted son, and enjoyment, to plaintiff's knowledge, of advantages of that status-Suit barred irrespective of any question of possession by adopted son.

The suit was instituted in 1875 to recover possession of a moiety of the estate of one S, deceased, from the principal defendant, G. S died in 1850, having adopted the plaintiff as his son in 1841 in conjunction with his first wife. plaintiff's adoption was admitted to be valid, and his right to the other half of the estate of S, which was in his possession, was undisputed. G was adopted by the second wife of S in the year 1851 in pursuance of an authority to adopt conferred upon her by S in 1844. He maintained that as such adopted son he was entitled to continue in possession of the mojety of the estate of S in his possession and that the suit was liable to be dismissed on that ground. He further contended that, even if his adoption was invalid, the suit was barred on the ground that twelve years had elapsed after his adoption without any suit having been raised to set the adoption aside. The question for decision was whether the suit was barred on the ground alleged.

S was survived by his said two wives. The second wife survived till the year 1884; the first wife was alive at the date of suit and was made a "pro forma defendant", but she died subsequently. The plaintiff came of age in 1861-2, and the principal defendant in 1862-3.

blished on the ground of the long unchallenged adoption of the principal defendant, notwith-tanding his assertion of the status and right of an adopted son, and his enjoyment, with the complete knowledge of the plaintiff, of the advantages which that status gave him (35).

The adoption of the principal defendant was made in the year 1851, with all the usual ceremonies, and was duly reported to the Government Collector, Thereafter, on 20-2-1852. it was ordered on a petition by the mother of S, and his two widows, in which it was stated that the mother, "together with the said two sons," (the plaintiff and the principal defendant) had taken possession of all the moveable and immoveable properties of the deceased, that the names of the mother of S, of his first wife, as mother of the plaintiff, minor, and of the 2nd wife of S, as mother of the principal defendant, minor, should be registered in respect of the deceased's property. After the death of the mother of S, the two widows, describing themselves as mothers of their respective minor sons, presented an application under the Act XX of 1841 to obtain a certificate of title for the administration of their late husband's estate, which would enable them to sue all debtors to the estate. In this petition they stated that their two minor sons had got the right of inheritance in all the properties, moveable and immoveable, of the deceased, and that they, the petitioners became entitled thereto as guardians on behalf of the said two minor sons, and were in possession on their behalf; and in 1855 a certificate was granted to them accordingly "as guardians of the said minors," under the authority of which they thereafter administered the estate. It need only be further stated, that from the time of his adoption in 1851 the defendant lived with his adoptive mother, as the adopted son of her late husband, till she herself died in 1884, being for about 33 years; that down to 1800, a period of 18 years, the two widows and their adopted sons (the plaintiff and the defendant) lived in family together; and that even after that date down to 1880, the collections of rents and income of the deceased's estates were made jointly by the widows, and divided in equal moieties, the widows having their respective sons in family with them. It is thus quite clear-apart from any question of possession, and whether the possession for so long a period of time as elapsed at the death of the 2nd wife of S, was truly the possession of her son, for whom she acted as guardian, and after he attained majority as his manager. or was possession by herself in virtue of a right of life-rent conferred by her husband's anumati patra, and in any view that the right of the defendant to the status of an adopted son of S was openly and constantly asserted, not only in all actings connected with the estates, but also in his daily life in family with the plaintiff, who, indeed, in many ways acknowledged or acquiesced in the assertion of this right

The period of twelve years after the defendant's adoption expired in 1863, and eight years more had elapsed when the Limitation Act of 1871 was passed. The Act came into force on the 1st April, 1873, and no suit having been brought on that date to set aside the defendant's adoption, the plaintiff's right of action was barred (37). (Lord Shand.) Held that the defence of limitation had been clearly esta- (widow) died inte-tate in 1893. Shortly after her death, the appellant's father S, being found in possession and claiming under an adoption alleged to have been made in his favour by the Thakurain after her husband's death, had his name entered in her place in the Revenue accounts. The alleged adoption was found to have been made in 1858. In 1899 the respondent instituted a suit within three years of his attaining majority, claiming to succeed as next heir in right of his grandfather, who was the eldest brother of the Thakurain. The Court below found, and their Lordships were disposed to accept its view, that there was no adoption in fact, but only a nomination of S as the Thakurain's heir, or, in other words, an adoption in a popular sense. Both the Courts below decided in favour of the plaintiff.

On the appeal to their Lordships it was argued on behalf of the appellant (the son of S) that there was at any rate an apparent adoption, and that, on that assumption, it mattered not whether the adoption was valid or invalid, because there was enough to satisfy the provisions of the Limitation Act of 1871, as interpreted by the Board in the case of Jagadamba Chowdhrani. The appellant's case was rested entirely on the Limitation Act of 1871. It was contended for him that the Act of 1877 did not apply because he relied on title acquired before the passing of the Act of 1877, and his rights were therefore saved by S. 2 of that Act. It was admitted on behalf of the appellant that if the Act of 1877 applied he was out of Court,

Held that the suit was not barred.

Giving full effect to the Jagadamba case and the other cases which followed it, their Lordships do not think that the immunity, such as it is, gained by the lapse of twelve years after the date of an apparent adoption amounts to acquisition of title within the meaning of S. 2 of the Act of Querre, whether the alleged adoption was or was not an apparent adoption to which the ruling in the Jagamba case would apply if the Act of 1871 were now in force. (Lord Macnaghten.) THAKUR TIRBHUWAN BAHADUR SINGH 2. RAJA RAMESHWAR BAKHSH SINGH.

Art. 129 of the Limitation Act of 1871 is inapplicable to a case in which the alleged adoption by a Hindu widow was not the adoption of a son as heir to her husband, but was merely an adoption of an heir to herself, and in fact a disposition of her property, very much in the nature of a will, to the heir adopted after her death (113). Art. 129 of the Limitation Act of 1871, though it might bar a suit brought only for the purpose of setting aside an adoption, does not interfere with the right which, but for it, a plaintiff has of bringing a suit to recover possession of real property within twelve years from the time when the right accrued (113).

what was called a deed of adoption. The respondent also prayed for the setting aside of that deed. The question arose whether, as regards that prayer, the suit was not barred under Art. 129 of the Limitation Act of 1871.

Held that the suit was in its nature one which the respondent had, but for the adoption, the right of bringing to recover possession of real property within twelve years from the date of the death of the widow, and that the article did not interfere with that right of the respondent (113). Nor do their Lordships think that any guidance in the construction of the earlier Act (Limitation Act of 1871) is to be gained from the later one (Act of 1877), except that we may fairly infer that the Legislature considered the expression "suit to set aside an adoption" to be one of a loose kind, and that more precision was desirable (94). the phrase. The words of Art. 129 of the Limitation Act of 1871 are not such as to prevent doubt or difficulty in its construction. The expression, "suit to set aside an adoption" is not quite precise as applied to any suit. An adoption may be established, but can hardly be set aside, though an alleged or pretended adoption may be declared to be no adoption at all (93). (Lord Hobbouse). JAGADAMBA CHOWDHRANI (1886) 13 I. Suit to set aside an adoption-Meaning of.

The expression "set aside an adoption" in Art. 129 of the Limitation Act of 1871 is and has been for many years applied in the ordinary language of Indian lawyers to proceedings which bring the validity of an alleged adoption under question, and applied quite indiscriminately to suits for possession of land and to suits of a declaratory nature (94). If then the expression "set aside an adoption in Art. 129 of the Limitation Act of 1871 is not such as to denote solely, or even to denote accurately, a suit confined to a declaration that an alleged adoption is invalid in law or never took place in fact, is there anything in the scope or structure of the Act to prevent us from giving to it the ordinary sense in which it is used, though it may be loosely, invalid, but he contended that, in that view, the plaintiff's by professional men, the sense, namely, of every proceeding which brings the validity of an alleged adoption under question? The plaintiff's counsel were asked, but were not able, to suggest any principle on which suits involving the issue of adoption or no adoption must, if of a merely declaratory nature, be brought within twelve years from the adoption, while yet the very same issue is left open for twelve years after the death of the adopting widow, it may be fifty years more, if only it is mixed up with a suit for the possession of the same property. It seems to their Lordships that the more rational and probable principle to ascribe to an Act whose language admits of it, is the principle of allowing only a moderate time within which such delicate and intricate questions as those involved in adoptions shall be brought into dispute, so that it shall strike alike at all suits in which the plaintiff cannot possibly succeed without displacing an apparent adoption by virtue of which the defendant is in possession (94-5). (Lord Hobbense). JAGADAMBA CHOWDHRANI v. DAKHINA (1886) 13 I.A. 84 = 13 C. 308 (320-1)= MOHUN. 4 Sar. 715.

- Suit to zet aside an adoption within-Suit for possession in which plaintiff cannot succeed without displacing an apparent adoption if a.

The respondents brought two suits to recover possession of the properties in suit as the reversionary heirs of the last full owner, one II. Their title accrued on the death of his surviving widow. The appellants were in possession alleging that the appellant Saroda and Doorga, deceased, the husband of the appellant, Jagadamba, were his adouted sons, and therefore his preferential heirs. The question was whether the suits were barred under Art. 129 of the Limitation Act of 1871.

It was argued for the plaintiffs that the Article in ques-tion was inapplicable to the suits, because they were suing not to set aside any adoption, but to recover possession on their perma facie title as heirs, and it was the defendants who had to allege and prove adoption and, on their failure to do so, it would not be set aside, but taken as never having existed. In one of the suits the plaintiff told the story of the adoptions; and directly impeached their validity. In the other the plaint was silent on that point.

Held that, whatsoever the mode of pleading, there was but one issue on the merits of the case, namely, the validity or invalidity of the adoptions, by virtue of which alone the defendants held their property, that, if the validity was proved, the plaintiffs could not succeed in their claim, and that the suits were therefore suits to set aside an adoption within the meaning of the Article in question (92-3).

The defendants are in possession in the character of adopted sons; the prima facie title is with them, and until that is displaced they ought to retain their possession (92). JAGADAMBA CHOWDHRANI D. DAK-(Land Hobbouse). (1886) 13 I.A. 84= HINA MOHUN. 13 C. 308 (318.9) = 4 Sar. 715.

-Plaintiff was in possession, as proprietor, of one moiety of the estate of the deceased S, and in the suit out of which the appeal arose he sought to have it declared that he was entitled as proprietor to possession of the other moiety of that estate. The plaintiff was the validly adopted son of S, and his right to the half of the estate in his pos-session was undisputed. The principal defendant, G, maintained that he was also an adopted son of S, having been adopted by his junior widow in pursuance of an authority to adopt conferred upon her by S, and that he was as such adopted son entitled to continue in possession of the half of the estate in his possession. His adoption was, however, suit was barred by fimitation, inasmuch as twelve years had elapsed after his adoption without any suit having been raised to set the adoption aside.

Held that the suit was one "to set aside an adoption" within the meaning of Art, 129 of the Limitation Act of 1871 (36).

The present is not a suit in which the plaintiff expressly asks for a decree to "see aside" the defendant's adoption, or to obtain a declaration that the "adoption was invalid," which would probably be a more apt expression to use. The plaintiff merely asks for a declaration of his right, and that possession may be given to him of the properties in dispute. But this, in the circumstances, obviously involves the setting aside of the defendant's adoption, or in effect a judgment or finding by the Court that the adoption is invalid, for the defence of possession founded on the adoption directly involves the decision of the question-was the adoption invalid? In the case of Jagadamba Uhowdrani, it was settled that a suit to set aside an adoption within the meaning of these words in the Limitation Act need not be a surt having declaratory conclusions, but that any suit in which the decree prayed for involves the decision of the question of validity of an adoption set up in defence is a suit to set aside an adoption (35), (Lord Shand). The adoption was, however, invalid; but A and his successors in interest held the properties in virtue of his right as such adopted son from 1862 practically until 1902, when C died. In 1905, the plaintiffs, claiming to be the reversionary heirs of C's hasband and to be entitled to succeed to his properties on her death, sued for the recovery thereof from M. the widow of A, and from alienees from her. From the facts and dates in the case it appeared that plaintiff's father and uncle, who were at the date of the adoption of of the only persons entitled to set it aside, had arrived at full age long before the Limitation Act IX of 1871 expired.

Held that the suit was barred under Art. 129 of the

The plaintiffs could not be entitled to a decree for possession without displacing the adoption of A. Art. 129 of the Limitation Act of 1871 relates to all suits in which the plaintiff cannot succeed without displacing an apparent adoption. That Article prescribed a period of 12 years from the date of the adoption as the period of time within which a suit to set it aside must be brought. Act IX of 1871 did not give to a reversioner whose right to sue for possession accrued upon the death of a Hindu widow any further time than the 12 years given by Art. 129 to any plaintiff. That Act was in force until 19th July, 1877. In the present case the period of limitation allowed by Art. 129 of Act IX of 1871 expired in 1874 and that Act (Sir John Edge). VAITHIALINGA P. Art. 118 of the Act of 1877, which corresponds to Art. 129 of the Act of 1871 so far as regards setting aside adoptions, speaks of a suit " to obtain a declaration that an alleged adoption is invalid or never in fact took place," and assigns a different starting point to the time that is to run against it.

—It was suggested that, the Limitation Act of 1871 (Art. 129) having been superseded by the Act of 1877, the question of limitation should be determined with reference to the provisions of the later Statute, in which the language used is somewhat different, the suit there referred to, as necessary to save the limitation, being described as one." to obtain a declaration that an alleged adoption is invalid, or never, in fact, took place." It seems to be more than doubtful whether, if these were the words of the Statute applicable to the case, the plaintiff would thereby take any advantage (37-8). (Lord Shand.) MOHESH NARAIN MOONSHI v. It is contended that if a mortgagee wishes to fore lose be may do so within the time limited by Act 147 of the Limitation Act of 1877; that, on the 1st of July, 1882, the right to maintain foreclosure suits was conferred on Bengal mortgagees; and that the Limitation Act immediately fastened on those suits, and provided 60 years as the limit for them. But in the year 1878, when no suit for toreclosure could be brought, the right of the mortgagee to possession was wholly extinguished, and the title of the parchasers under the mortgagor freed from the mortgage. And the subsequent creation of suits for foreclosure could not, except by clear enactment, revive the extinct right. In effect the clear enactment, is, incleed, the other way, for S. 2 (c) of the Transfer of Property Act says that nothing therein shall affect "any right or liability arising out of a legal relation constituted before this Act comes into force, or any relief in respect of such right or liability".

The appellant, the representative in interest of a mortgagee under a mortgage in the English form, sued the mortgager and purchasers from him of portions of the mortgaged property for recovery of the mortgage debt, or, in default, a declaration that the defendants would be unable to redeem the mortgaged properties, and an order for possession. S, the original mortgagee, had instituted proceedings for foreclosure of the mortgage against the mortgagor only, and had by virtue thereof become absolute owner as against him on or strictly before 31-3-1873. The purchasers from the mortgagor were, however, not made parties to those proceedings, and therefore remained unaffected by them, and the mortgagee's right as against them became barred in August, 1878, at the latest. The appellants' suit was instituted only in 1882.

Held that the right barred in 1878, under Act 132 of the Limitation Act of 1877, was not revived by the creation of suits for foreclosure by the Transfer of Property Act

Their Lordships consider that within the meaning of bound by such a decree will not, by virtue of Art. 141, be S, 2 (c) of the Transfer of Property Act, the right of the entitled to bring a suit for possession of that property on

With regard to a suit for possession of immoveable property brought by a Hindu reversioner entitled to the possession of that property on the death of a Hindu widow, the law, under the Limitation Act of 1859, was that such a suit must be brought within twelve years from the time when the cause of action arose. By the Limitation Act of 1871, the whole of the Act of 1859 which applied to the limitation of suits was repealed; and by the 4th section it was enacted that, subject to the provisions contained in vertain sections, every suit instituted after the period of limitation prescribed therefor by the second schedule to the Act should be dismissed, although limitation had not been set up as a defence, Art, 142 in the second schedule is as follows:—

"Like suit (that is for possession of immoveable property) by a Hindu entitled to the possession of immoveable property on the death of a Hindu widow. Period of limitation—twelve years. Time when period begins to run when the widow dies."

In 1877 this Act was repealed and the Limitation Act of 1877 was passed. In that Act the same period of limitation was by Art. 141 prescribed to a suit by a Hindu or Mahomedan entitled to the possession on the death of a Hindu or Mahomedan female. The words "entitled to the possession of immoveable property" in Art. 141 refer to the then existing law; and, if under that law, a reversioner being bound by a decree fairly and properly obtained against the widow could not bring a suit for possession, he could not do so by virtue of Art. 141. Art. 141 cannot be construed as altering the law respecting the effect of a decree (191-2). (Sir Richard Couch.) HARRINATH CHATTERJI :: MOHUNT MOTHOOR MOHUN GOSWAMI.

LIMITATION ACT (XV OF 1877)—(Contd.) Arts. 179 and 180—(Contd.)

The question was whether an application for an order absolute for sale was or was not barred.

The preliminary decree was passed by the Sub-Judge on 12-5-1890 for the sale of the property unless payment was made on or before 12-8-1890. That decree was affirmed by the High Court on appeal by its decree, dated 8-4-1893. The mortgagor obtained leave to appeal to the Privy Council, but did not prosecute his appeal, and on 13 5-1901, the appeal was dismissed for want of prosecution.

On an application for an order absolute to sell the mortgaged properties made on 11-6-1909, it was contended that the application was not barred, because the decree which it was sought to enforce had been constructively turned into a decree of His Majesty in Council and assigned to the date of 13-5-1901, by virtue of the dismissal of the appeal for want of prosecution on that date, and therefore the period of limitation was 12 years from 13-5-1901, by virtue of Art. 180 of the Limitation Act of 1877.

Held, overruling the contention and reversing the Court below, that the only decree capable of enforcement was the decree of the High Court dated 8-4-93, that the period of limitation applying to the enforcement of it at all material times was therefore a period of 3 years, and that the application for an order absolute was barred by limitation.

The only decree for sale that exists is the decree, dated 8-4-1893, and that is a decree of the High Court. The operation of this decree has never been stayed, and there is no decree of His Majesty in Council in which it has become merged. (Lord Mondton.) ABDUL MAJID v. JAWAHIR LAL. The Indian Limitation Act, 1908, applies to arbitration proceedings, and an arbitrator acting under an ordinary submission to arbitration is bound to give effect to all legal defences, including a defence under any statute of limitation.

Although the Limitation Act does not in terms apply to arbitrations, in mercantile references it is an implied term of the contract that the arbitrator must decide the dispute according to the existing law of contract, and every defence which would have been open in a Court of law can be equally proposed for the arbitrator's decision unless the parties have agreed to exclude that defence. Where an order is made admitting an appeal presented out of time in the absence of respondent, and without notice to him, it must, in common fairness, be regarded as a tacit term of such an order that, though unqualified in expression. it should be open to reconsideration at the instance of the party prejudicially affected. Further, on objection taken by the respondent, it is open to the court at the final hearing of the appeal to entertain the question of limitation and to dismiss the appeal on the ground of delay in presentation. That practice is not peculiar to Madras (27-8). (Sir I aurence Jenkins.) KRISHNASWAMI PANDIKONDAR P. Held, that the fact that the party had acted on mistaken advice as to the law in appealing to the High Court did not preclude him from showing that it was owing to his reliance on that advice that he had not presented the appeal to the District Court within the prescribed period of limitation, and the High Court rightly decided that the party had sufficient cause for not appealing to the District Court within the time allowed. The benefit of Ss. 11 and 12 of the Limitation Act of 1859 applies as well to the period during which the disability continues as to the period when the disability has ceased.

Held, therefore that a minor could, even after the expiration of the year provided by S. 246 of C. P. C. of 1859, bring a suit by his guardian, whilst the disability of infan.y continues (25).

The contrary construction is unreasonable in itself, since it implies that the infant's claim, which is admittedly not barred, was asserted too soon rather than too late; and it cannot be the policy of the law to postpone the trial of claims. Again to render such a construction imperative the phraseology of S. 11 must be altered by making the words "after the disability shall have ceased" precede instead of following, as they do, the words "within the same time" (25-6). The two appellants who were minors did not come of age until a month or two before the hearing of the suit by the first Court. The respondent relied upon S. 8 of the Limitation Act and argued that limitation was not suspended against the minors.

Held that the answer to the contention was that the two appellants who were minors did not come age until a month or two before the hearing of the suit by the first court, and that the appellant who was of age, was not capable of giving a discharge which would bind the two minors (8-9). The plaintiff, claiming to be the true heir of the old Zemindar, brought the suit out of which the appeal arose against the Secretary of State for possession of the Zemindary and also for an account and repayment of the subsequently accruing sevenue. The plaintiff came of full age in 1837, and from that time down to the date of suit far more than the period mentioned in the statute of Limitations had run. The plaintiff, however, sought to get over the bar of limitation by relying upon S. 10 of the Limitation Act of 1877. He contended that A' had been let into possession by the Court of Wards by mistake, and that, under the circumstances already stated, the Government coming into posses sion under a claim of forfeiture from A' were a person in whom the property had become vested in trust for a specific purpose within the meaning of that section, and that the suit was brought against such a person for the purpose of following, in his or their hands, such property.

The expression " for the purpose of following in his or their hands such property" in S. 10 of the Limitation Act, means for the purpose of recovering the property for the trusts in question. When property used is for some purpose other than the proper purpose of the trusts in question, it may be recovered, without any bar of time, from the hands of the persons indicated in the section. But there is no question of recovering the property for the trusts of the endowment, where the defendant admits that he is a trustee and says that he is applying the property to the trusts of the endowment. Where there is no evidence that he is not applying the property to the trusts of the edoxment, and there is no reason to conclude that the property would be more applied to those trusts if the plaintiff recovered the property from the defendant, the plaintiff is suing only for his own personal right to manage or in some way to control the management of the endowment, and the case does not fall within S. 10. Suit to take meay property from trust.

A Chinese resident in the Straits Settlements died in 1882, having executed a will in Chinese form in the year 1874. By his will the testator provided that his property was to be dealt with by payment of a very large number of pecuniary legacies, and after they had been paid and satisfied, the residue was to be divided into sixty shares. As to 16 of those shares he directed that they should be the means of his maintenance during his lifetime, and should be " Kong lin for yearly and other sacrifices after his death " Both by clause 4 and by clause 22 of the testator's will it appeared that he contemplated that that residue should be left undistributed for 16 years. At the expiration of 16 years the testator declared by clause 22 that the income of the shares should " begin to be my sons and grandsons (or grandchildren) Kong lin for yearly sacrifices as well as for sacrifices in spring and autumn.

The plaintiff was the legal representative of a granddaughter of the testator, her grandfather, the testator's son, having died in the testator's lifetime. She instituted the suit out of which the appeal arose asking that the gift of the said sixteen sixtieths of the residue to the " kong lin" Should be declared void and distributed among the next of kin. The defendants, the executors of the will, raised the plea that the suit was barred by limitation. The plaintiff sought to get over the plea by contending that she was in fact entitled under the benefit of the trust contained in cl. 22 of the will, and that the suit was not barred by virtue of the provisions of S. 10 of the Straits Settlements Limitations Ordiance No. 6, 1896,

Held, overruling the plea, that, even assuming that in cl. 22 there was an intention that a grand-daughter should be included, S. 10 was nevertheless inapplicable.

The gift is not to the class beneficially, but to perform ceremonies which it is said render the gift void; so that even on the hypothesis that cl. 22 was intended to include a grand-daughter the plaintiff is not seeking to restore the property to the trust but to take it away, and consequently S. 10 is inapplicable (Lord Buckmaster.) Will-Trustees under-Next of kin-Undisposed of property when vested in trustees in trust for.

-Salter v. Cavanagh-Principle of-Inapplicability of, to claim by next of kin against will.

The principle that underlies the case of Salter v. Cavanagh (1 Dr. and Wal. 668) is this that if property be set aside by a testator from the general body of his estate and vested in trustees upon certain trusts, which upon the face of them are inadequate to exhaust the whole of the property, there remains as to the balance a trust impressed upon the trustees in favour of the next of kin or the heir-at-law, a trust for the purpose of which you have to do no violence whatever to the language of the will, for which it is unnecessary to disregard any intention or desire that the testator has expressed, for which it is only necessary to imply that when the testator knew, as he must have done, that the specific purpose to which the property had been devoted did not exhaust the whole trust estate, the balance would of necessity he held by the trustees for the heir-at-law or the next of kin.

That principle has no application to a case in which the only way in which the next of kin can assert their position is by defeating the provisions that the testator has made in his will. Where it is only upon the hypothesis that those provisions are bad that his interest arises it is impossible to say that in those circumstances the property was vested in trust for a specific purpose in which the next of kin was in any way interested. The word "requisite" is a strong word; it may be regarded as meaning something more than the word required. pellant must be considered. No period can be regarded as requisite under the Act, which need not have elapsed, if the appellant had taken reasonable and proper steps to obtain the order. The proposition is not sound that, in determining what period is to be deducted in any case, the time actually consumed in obtaining the decree is to be regarded.

The question was whether the Appeal Court at Calcutta was right in holding that an appeal presented to it by the appellant was out of time. The period of appeal was twenty days from the date of the decree or order which it was sought to impeach.

The appeal was against an order, dated 26th July, 1918, refusing appellant's application to set aside a decree passed against him. No steps were immediately taken by the appellant (plaintiff) to have the order drawn up, but after the lapse of four days it was competent to the defendant to app'y for that parpose. The four days elapsed and nothing was done. On the 6th August application was made by the plaintiff to have the order drawn up, and on the 7th August the draft of the order was sent to the appellant. The order was simplicity itself, but the appellant only returned the draft on the 16th August. On the 28th August it was signed, and on the 3rd September it was filed by the plaintiff.

Held, affirming the court below, that the periods between the 30th July and the 6th August, and again between the 7th August and the 16th August, which were within the appellant's control, were sufficiently great to prevent the appellant saying that the time did elapse must have elapsed, even if he had acted with reasonable promptitude. G, a Hindu, died in 1872 leaving a widow and three sons B, M, and C. The suit out of which the appeal arose was brought on 14-11-1904 by the respondents, the sons of M. for a one-third share in "eight houses," which had devolved on their father on the death of G. The defendants were the representatives of B and C. Their defence was that the suit was barred by limitation under the Limitation Act of Limitation admittedly ran against the respondents from 1892. But they contended that it was suspended between the 20th April, 1903 and the 22nd February. 1904, and that in consequence the suit was not barred. The question was whether it was so suspended.

Up to 18-1-1892, M and the sons of C had participated in the use and enjoyment of their shares in the eight houses, but on that date owing to a quarrel with B and the widow of G, they were dispossessed and B alone collected the rents and profits of the premises to the exclusion of M and the sons of C. In 1896, the sons of C instituted a suit to have their rights and interests declared in the eight houses." In 1897 both B and M died and their sons and legal representatives were brought on the record in their place. In that suit the position of the sons and legal representatives of M (the respondents) was the same as that of the plaintiffs in that suit and they supported the case of the plaintiffs. An issue was raised at the instance of the representatives of R as between themselves and the representatives of M codefendants, as to whether the latter was entitled to a 1/2 share in the house. The suit was heard by Henderson, J. and by a decree, dated 20-4-1903, the plaintiffs in that suit were declared entitled to a 5/6 share in the houses and it was expressly declared that the sons and legal representatives of M were jointly entitled to 1/3 part of the property in dispute, and it was directed that quiet possession be given them of the share to which they had been declared to be entitled. The representatives of B appealed against that judgment, and on 22-2-1904 the appellate Court, while confirming the decree in favour of the plaintiffs in that suit, set aside the decree so far as it related to the representatives of M, -Partition-Suit for-Limitation-Prior suit for partition of same property dismissed for want of jurisdiction-Deduction of period of pendency of-Right to.

In a suit for a partition of joint family properties, moveable and immoveable, brought by one of the sons of a deceased Hindu subject to the Bombay Mitakshara law against his (plaintiff's) brothers, the question was whether the suit was barred under S. 1, cl. (13) of the Limitation Act of 1859. It appeared that the plaintiff had, during the lifetime of his father, brought a suit in 1861 against the father and the defendants (his brothers) for a partition of the family moveable and immoveable properties, but that that suit had been dismissed, as regards the immoveable properties, on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction to make a partition thereof as they were situate beyond the limits of its territorial jurisdiction.

Held that, so far as the immoveable properties of the family were concerned, the plaintiff was, under S. 14 of the Act, entitled to exclude from the computation of the period of limitation the time occupied in the prosecution of the suit of 1861, inasmuch as the decision of the Court, guested the immoveable properties, proceeded on the ground of want of jurisdiction over them (192). In a suit for enhancement of rent of a sub-tenure brought by the zemindar, the Sub-Judge made a decree on 31-7-1895 and awarded the enhanced rate prospectively from the end of the Fasli year 1298. On 20-11-1895, the Zemindar filed a suit against the holders of the subordinate tenure to recover the arrears of rent due for 1298. The High Court held, reversing the Sub-Jadge, that that suit was barred by limitation.

Held, reversing the High Court, that the proceedings in the earlier suit stayed the operation of the law of limitation; and that as the zemindar claimed the arrears of 1298 in that suit, but his claim was then disallowed as premature, he was in the subsequent suit entitled to the benefit of the decree for enhancement and to recover the arrears at the enhanced rate (181). Suit to recover a sum of money lodged by the plaintiffs the assigners of a dur-putnee talook, in Court, in order to stay the sale of a putnee talook for an arrear of rent due to the zemindar from the defendants, who were the putnee talookdars, and thereby to save a dur-putnee talook of the second degree, which had been created by the defendants out of their said putnee talook.

The plaintiffs had previously instituted a suit in another Court against the defendants to recover the same amount. The defendants pleaded to the jurisdiction of that Court, and the trial Judge rejected their plea and gave judgment for the plaintiffs. His decision was reversed on appeal, and in special appeal the High Court affirmed the appellate decree upholding the objection of the defendants. It was found as a fact that the prior suit was prosecuted bona fide and with due diligence.

Held that, in computing the period of limitation applicable to the subsequent suit, the plaintiffs were, under S. 14 of the Limitation Act of 1859, entitled to a deduction of the whole time occupied in the prior suit, including the time during which the special appeal to the High Court was pending (905).

The effect is the same whether the order is one which was made before judgment or is one passed after decree (42-3).

There would be no violation of such an order until the restrained creditor came to receive his debt from the restrained debtor. And the institution of a suit might for more than one reason be a very proper preceeding on the part of the restrained creditor, as, for example, to avoid the bar by time, though it might also be prudent to let the Court which had issued the order know what he was about (42-3). There is nothing in the Ordinance to coefine "legal representative" to a person to whom the Court has actually made a grant. The plaintiff alleged that the grant had been fraudulently concealed from himself and his predecesors in interest, except the grantor, so as to prevent the statute of Limitations being a bar.

Held, on the evidence in the case, that there was not only no fraudulent concealment of the grant of 1851, but no concealment at all (158). The land granted was alleged by the plaintiff to be the property of a devaswom, and, whatever interest might be conferred by the grant of 1851, the grant amounted to a wrongful alienation of the property, which the plaintiff and his predecessors had a right to set aside.

The appeal arose out of a suit brought by the assignce of A, against the appellant to recover assets alleged to belong to the insolvent's estate, of which the appellant had wrongfully become possessed.

The first item which was in dispute, namely the China Assets, was of the following kind. The insolvent had a business at Hong Kong, and his two brothers, one of whom was the appellant, also carried on business at the same place in partnership. By the middle of 1866 the insolvent was in very embarrassed circumstances. In September, 1866, he absconded so as to conceal himself from his creditors. His petition in insolvency was presented on 17-12-1866, and he was adjudicated insolvent on 7-1-1867. Pending those transactions, that is to say on 1-1-1867, between the date of the petition and the date of the adjudication, the whole of the insolvent's assets at Hong Kong were handed over by his manager to the firm of his brothers, and his books were also handed over.

The suit out of which the appeal arose was brought in 1887, and the appellant pleaded that it was barred by time. The assignee's answer was that the transfer was committed in pursuance of a fraud, and was concealed from the creditors, that it was a fraud which prevented the assignee from having knowledge of his right to recover the assets, and therefore fell within S. 18 of the Limitation Act of 1877. The assignee alleged that he did not know anything about that fraud until the year 1885.

Held that the onus was on the appellant to prove that the assignee had clear and definite knowledge of those facts which constituted the fraud, at a time which was too remote to allow him to bring the suit (5),

Where all that the appellant did was to show that some clues and hints reached the assignee in the year 1881, which perhaps, if vigorously and actively followed up, might have led to a complete knowledge of the fraud, but that there was no disclosure made which informed the mind of the assignce that the 'insolvent's estate had been defrauded by the appellant of those assets in the year 1867, held that there was not proof of such knowledge on the part of the assignce as would deprive him of the benefit of S. 18 of the Limitation Act (5-6.)

Held, accordingly, that the suit was brought in good time, being brought within two years after the real knowledge came to the mind of the assignee (6). (Lord Hobhouse). RAHIMBHOY HUBIBBHOY P. TURNER.

acknowledgment-Sufficiency of, on -Conditional performance of condition.

An acknowledgment of liability, if the balance on investigation should turn out to be against the person making the acknowledgment, is sufficient under S. 19 of the Limitation Act of 1877.

There is no reason for drawing any distinction in this respect between the English and the Indian Law. Under the English law an acknowledgment to take the case out of the Statute of Limitations must be either one from which an absolute promise to pay can be inferred or. secondly, an unconditional promise to pay the specific debt, or, thirdly, there must be a conditional promise to pay the debt and evidence that the condition has been performed. An unconditional acknowledgment has always been held toimply a promise to pay, because that is the natural inference if nothing is said to the contrary. It is what every honest man would mean to do. There can be no reason for giving a different meaning to an acknowledgment that there is a right to have the accounts settled, and no qualification of the natural inference that whoever is the creditor shall be paid when the condition is preformed by the ascertainment of a balance in favour of the claimant. It is a case of the third proposition referred to above, a conditional promise to puy and the condition performed. (Sir Alfred Wills.) MANI-(1906) 33 I. A. 165 (172) = RAM P. SETH RUPCHAND.

-English decisions if a proper guide to determine.

Though the English law requires words from which a promise to pay may be inferred, yet under it it is the acknowledgment of liability which is the ground upon which a promise to pay is inferred, so that the requirements of English law as to a valid acknowledgment are, if anything, more and not less, stringent than those of Indian law. English cases on the question as to what amount to valid acknowledgments can be looked at for deciding what acknowledgments will be valid under S. 19 of the Limitation Act of 1877. -Law applicable for determination of -Law in force at date of suit-Law applicable when alleged acknowledge ment was made.

The suit which was instituted in 1907, was against the daughter's son of a deceased Hindu for the redemption of a usufructuary mortgage executed in favour of the deceased in 1842. In the years 1866 and 1867 the widow and daughter respectively of the deceased mortgagee executed deeds of sale of the mortgage interest which acknowledged the existence of the mortgage. It was contended that the Limitation Act of 1859 applied to the case, and that the acknowledgments of 1866 and 1867 by the widow and the daughter being acknowledgments by persons "claiming under" the mortgagee were good acknowledgments under S. 1, cl. 15 of that Act and were effectual to save limitation.

Held that the Act of 1859 was inapplicable to the suit, that the Act of 1877 alone applied, and that the acknowledgments in question were not acknowledgments within the meaning of S. 19 of the Act of 1877 made by a person or persons through whom the defendant derived title or liability, and that they were ineffectual to give a new period of limitation (84). The estate of A was sequestered by the Collector of the District, who issued a proclamation and notices, calling upon the creditors of A to come forward and represent the extent of their dues. The petitioner, who held a bond from A, presented a petition to the Collector, mentioning the bond and stating the amount due thereunder. A also filed an account before the Collector, admitting the execution of the bond, and stating the amount due thereunder. A's estate was subsequently released from attachment, and his creditors were directed to seek their own remedy against A.

In a suit subsequently instituted by the plaintiff to recover upon the bond, held that the account field by A before the Collector was a distinct acknowledgment on his part of the existence of the bond, and also of the payments on which the plaintiff relied to take the case out of the Statute of Limitations (249). -Paper admitting indebtedness drawn up in presence of debtor but not signed by him if an.

The appeal arose out of a suit brought for the purpose of recovering Rs. 3,481. The Court below held that the whole of the plaintiff's claim was not proved, but that there was proof of an acknowledgment, on the part of the defendant that a sum amounting to Rs. 2,701 was due from the defendant to the plaintiff, and gave the plaintiff a decree for that amount. The question was whether the Court below was right in holding that there was such an acknowledgment.

It appeared that the plaintiff and the defendant went to the house of one of the plaintiff's witnesses, and got him to write a copy of a Kurar-dad (deed of agreement or compromise) on the plaintiffs' claims, which they took away with them, and that afterwards defendant gave it to the witness to write on stamp paper. It further appeared from the witness's evidence that that copy was written over on the stamp paper, and that the defendant gave it to the plaintiff.

The defendant promised to bring the stamp paper back when he had got witnesses for it, but he never brought it to the witness. The copy of that was, however in the witness's possession, and he produced it at the hearing of the suit. That copy was the acknowledgment relied upon by the Court below. In it the defendant expressly acknowledged that he was indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of Rs. 2,207-3 odd, and he promised to pay the same on demand, with interest. That document did not, however, bear the signature of the defendant,

Held, that the Court below rightly treated the paper as an acknowledgment by the party who agreed to the contents of that paper that he did owe the plaintiff the amount stated therein. (Mr. Justice Bosanguet.) EDULJEE FRAMJEE p. ABDOOLA HAJFE CHERAK. (1837) 1 M.I.A. 461=

DEBT -- ACKNOWLED GMENT OF -- (Contd.)

In a case in which the question was whether the plaintiff had brought his case within the Exception to S.14 of Bengal Regulation III of 1793, it was contended for the defendant that there was no proof that a demand of the amount of the debt in dispute was specifically made by the plaintiff; or that the defendant admitted the truth of such a demand, or promised to pay it; that, as to the admissions of indebtedness, there was some doubt, whether any of them were made to the plaintiff himself; and that there was not any which amounted to a promise to pay the debt sucd for, or to an acknowledgment of any specific sum; that they were attempts at a compromise which failed.

The authorities which have been mainly relied on, in order to show that there has not been a sufficient acknowledgment within the period of limitation in the present case, were cases of actions on promises, decided on the statutes of the 21st Jac. 1 and the 9th Geo. IV. U. 14. The principle of these decisions is not applicable to a case like the present. They depend not upon the effect of an exception in the statute but upon the principles of the common law with respect to the cause of action. The issue joined made it incumbent on the plaintiff to prove a promise made within 6 years, and such as to agree with that laid in the declaration. In such cases, acknowledgments, whether by words or acts, are of no avail, save so far as they sustain the promise alleged; there is no exception within which they come; and these cases are to be regarded simply as actions brought on promises made within 6 years. But the cases in which acknowledgments are operative by way of exception, are of a different character. In these, the action must be maintained on the original security; and an acknowledgment within the prescribed period of limitation, shows that the obligation was then subsisting and unsatisfied; a promise to pay is not required. It is one thing to acknowledge a debt and another to promise to pay it, and this distinction is well recognised (54-5.) (Sir Joseph Napier.) GOPEE KISHEN GOSHAMFE P. Manager for pretection of joint estate by payment of joint delt—Petition to Court by joint debtors for including delt in question in list of joint debts—Admission if an.

The appellant and respondent were two co-owners of lands subject to payment of rent. The owner of the rent obtained decrees for a large sum in arrear, and to save the estate from sale the respondent and another co-owner deposited the arrear in Court, and the sum so deposited was paid to the judgment-creator on 1—4—1885. The respondent instituted the suit out of which the appeal arose against the appellant for contribution to the extent of her share in the estate. The question was whether or not his suit was barred by lapse of time.

The cause of action arose on 1—4—1885. The suit was brought in February, 1891. It appeared that in July, 1887, the three co-owners presented a petition to the District Court which was in effect an appointment of one B, as manager for (among other things) the protection of their ijmali joint property by the payment of their debts. One of the directions given to him was to apply surplus income "to the payment of the ijmali debts of us three co-owners, of which a list is given below." The list contained the names of 12 persons from whom the money used to pay the judgment creditor was borrowed; the amount due to each being set opposite to his name, and the total brought to the amount of Rs. 50,750.

There were two debts due to the same creditor, one on a mortgage bond and the other on a simple bond, by a person who was subsequently declared to be a disqualified proprietor. McId, therefore, that a written statement signed by a mookhtar authorised by the mortgagee to defend a suit brought by the mortgagee's heir against the mortgagee for an adjustment of accounts could not, even if it contained an acknowledgment of the title of the mortgagor, constitute an acknowledgment within the meaning of S. 1, cl. 15, of Act XIV of 1859 (898). MUTUAL AND OPEN ACCOUNTS—ADMISSION OF EXISTENCE OF —EFFECT OF.

--- Halance found due by destor - Liability for - Admission of, if also involved.

M and the defendant-re-pondent had regular dealings with one another from 1895 to 1898 and at the close of those dealings the respondent owed a certain sum to AI on account of principal and interest M died leaving a will by which the respondent and four other persons were appointed trustees to administer the estate. Three of them, of whom the respondent was one, applied for probate. The application was opposed, interalia, by the other two executors on the ground, amongst others, that the respondent owed money to the estate. The respondent in his reply, in writing and signed by him, to the petition of objections, stated as follows:- "The applicant (the respondent) is a big Mahajan of Burhampur paying Rs. 106 as income tax. For the last 5 years he had open and current accounts with the deceased (.I/). The alleged indebtedness does not affect his right to apply for probate."

In a suit brought, within three years of the date of the said reply of the respondent, on behalf of the adopted son of Al for the recovery of the amount due by the respondent on the said dealings, held that the statement in the respondent's reply set out above was sufficient acknowledgment to give a new period of limitation from the date of the acknowledgment, and that the suit instituted within three years thereof was not barred.

There is in the statement of the respondent a clear admission that there were open and mutual accounts between the parties at the death of M. The legal consequence would be that at that date either of them had a right as against the other to an account. It follows equally that wheever on the account should be shown to be the debtor to the other was bound to pay his debt to the other, and the inevitable deduction from this admission is that the respondent acknowledged his liability to pay his debt to M or his representative if the balance should be ascertained to be against him.

The trial judge dismissed the suit, being of opinion that the word "had" in the sentence "for the last 5 years he had open and current accounts with the deceased " and the word "alleged" were fatal to the validity of the acknowledgment. Their Lordships cannot share this opinion. The first sentence shews that there were open accounts at the death of M. If nothing further is alleged the natural presumption is that they continued unsettled at the time the statement was made. The sentence which follows is perfectly consistent with this admission. The meaning is "even if there is a balance against the respondent that does not disqualify him from fulfilling the duties of an executor." What is relied upon here is an acknowledgment subject to the condition that an adverse balance really exists, and the condition is fulfilled in fact.

The Divisional Court also held against the acknowledgment on the ground that it would require a considerable stretch of the imagination to place upon it the meaning that there was a right to have the account taken, thereby implying a promise to pay. There was no doubt no promise to pay in any event, but the words import an admission of liability if the balance should prove to be against the respondent coupled with the fulfilment of the condition—a state of things which in all reason and sound sense places the acknowledgment upon the same footing as an acknowledgment unconditional in the first instance, from which, in English law, a promise to pay has always been inferred.

 Disqualified proprietor—Sarbarakar or Manager of property of—Personal liability of ward—Acknowledgment of—Power of.

P, who succeeded as heir to the estate of L, became incompetent to manage his property, and his wife, K, was appointed by the Collector to be Sarbarakhar or manager. She never was his guardian. In a suit brought on a bond executed by L, held that it was very doubtful whether K had authority to acknowledge P's liability under the bond (39).

The debt due under the bond was a personal debt of L, not specifically charged on his estate, and P was liable to answer the bond to the extent of L's asests. The office of Sarbarahkar has regard to the lands with which the Collector is concerned, and not to the person or the personal property of the landholder. If so, it is difficult to see how a Sarbarahkar, not being guardian, can be authorised to admit a personal liability (39). (Lord Hobbouse,) BETI MAHARANI 7. COLLECTOR OF ETAWAH.

-Person having general authority to settle purchase and price of goods-Authority to acknowledge claim in respect of price of these goods.

The suit was brought against the appellant, a Raja, to recover the price of goods sold and delivered. The suit would be barred but for an alleged acknowledgment of the liability by one S made under a note of hand on 8-2-1908. The question for decision was whether S was an agent of the appellant duly authorised on his behalf to sign the note.

It appeared from the evidence that S was "kote" manager of the appellant, and that it was within his general authority as such manager to settle the purchase and price of goods of the kind in question.

Held, affirming the Court below, that S was a person duly authorised to sign the acknowledgment on behalf of the appellant within the meaning of S. 19 of the Limitation Act of 1908

-Agent duly authorised-Formal authority-Necessity-Implied authority-Sufficiency of -What amounts to. One B, who was a director of a bank, had been allowed by the bank's manager, R, to become indebted in a large sum to the bank, and in December, 1917, in view of the approaching half-yearly audit it was desirable that the account should be squared in some way as not to show the director as a delstor to the Bank. The first respondent was accordingly persuaded to execute a promissory note on 22-12-1917, so as to show him as the bank's debtor for the amount of B's indebtedness, and that amount was credited in the books of the bank to B, thus wiping out his indebtedness. On 23-12-1918, B paid a sum of Rs. 908-6-3 to interest due on the said promissory note, and the question was whether B made the payment as the agent and under the implied authority of the first respondent within the meaning of S. 20 of the Limitation Act. Upon the true meaning and effect of the transaction of

22-12-1917, it was agreed between B and the first respondent that the former would discharge the latter's debt to the Bank in respect of both principal and interest, and it was clear from the first respondent's evidence that he left it to B

Held, that, under the circumstances, there was no difficulty in implying authority from the first respondent to B to pay the interest on his behalf as it became due. (Sir George Loundes.) NATIONAL BANK OF UPPER INDIA. LTD. v. BANSIDHAR. (1929) 57 I. A. 1 = 51 C.L.J. 56=

Sufficiency of.

S. 20 of the Limitation Act says that a new starting point of time shall be gained when interest on a debt is paid as such by the person liable to pay the debt or by his agent. It does not specify any particular mode or form of payment, and there are many modes in which payment may be made. In this case the common agent of the joint debtors paid interest on the joint debt out of joint funds under express instructions contained in the instrument of his appointment. That is clearly a payment in exoneration pro tanto of the liability of the plaintiff, and such as is contemplated by S. 20 of the Limitation Act (101). (Lord Hobbouse.) SUKHAMONI P. -Payment of interest as such-Payment of lump sum in respect of several different accounts which debtor had with creditor-Allocation of sum by the creditor to the different accounts accepted by the debtor-If payment in respect of each of the accounts.

In a suit upon a promissory note executed in favour of a Bank, the question was whether a payment of a sum of Rs. 908-6-3 made by B on 23-12-1918 was a payment of interest "as such" within the meaning of S. 20 of the Limitation Act.

The said sum of Rs. 908-6-3 was part of a sum of Rs. 6,000 paid to the bank on 23-12-1918 by B. There were evidently several different accounts with the Bank upon which payments had to be made by B for interest on 31-12-1918, and the lump payment was probably to put his own account in funds for that purpose. It was proved that it was the bank's practice to send out formal notices of the interest that would be due on particular accounts at the end of each half-year, and presumably # had received either directly from the bank or through the medium of persons in whose names those accounts stood, notice of the payments that he would have to make. Tha sum of Rs. 6,000 paid by B was allocated by the Bank to the different accounts in which B was interested, and that allocation, including the credit of the Rs. 908 6 3 to interest due on the promissory note, was accepted by B, as was shown by the entries in his books a few days later.

Held, that the Rs. 908-6-3 was paid as and for the interest which was due under the promissory note within the meaning of S. 20 of the Limitation. Act and that payment was effective to save limitation. (Sir George Lorondes.) NATIONAL BANK OF UPPER INDIA, LTD, r. BANSIDHAR.

The first respondent executud a promissory note in dis-charge of a debt due by one B to a bank. Though the effect of the transaction was to substitute the first respondent as a debtor to the bank in the place of B, it was agreed between B and the first respondent that the debt should be treated as that of the former and that he should discharge the same to the bank in respect of both principal and interest. B paid a sum of money for interest 2 Ch. 430 and other similar decisions-Applicability of. rest due on the note, and the question was whether that payment saved limitation under S. 20 of the Limitation Act. It was contended for the bank even if B could not be regarded as duly authorized by the first respondent to make a payment of interest on his behalf, he was himself under a direct obligation to the first respondent to satisfy the debt, and in that sense was at all events "a" person liable to pay it. In support of that contention the case of Bradshase v. Widdrington, (1902) 2 Ch. 430, and other similar English decisions were relied upon.

Their Lordships did not think it necessary to discuss the applicability of those cases to the construction of the Indian Act.

Whether the English cases referred to above would engraft a larger principle upon S. 20 of the Limitation Act, may possibly have to be considered on some future occasion. (Sir George Lounder.) S. 22 of the Straits Settlements Limitation Ordinance No. 6 of 1896 contemplates cases in which a suit is defective by reason of the person or one of the persons in whom the right of suit is vested not being before the court .- S. 133 of the Civil Procedure Code provides against the defeat of a suit on this ground and enables the proper party to be added or substituted. If .t is the right person to sue, it would be clearly wrong to allow him, for the sake of avoiding the Limitation Ordinance, to take advantage of a suit improperly instituted by B. Their Lordships do not think that S. 22 of the Ordinance has any application to cases in which the suit was originally property constituted as to parties but has become defective because there has been a change or devolution of interest. Such cases do not fall within S. 133, but within S. 169, of the Civil Procedure Code, and the proper remedy is by way of an order to carry on proceedings, and not of an order adding or substituting parties (121-2). The amended plaint was accordingly superseded by one in which the suit was to be one against the appellants alone. PLAINTIFF-PERSON ALREADY A.

Order erroneous for addition of-Applicability of section to case of.

The suits out of which the appeals arose were instituted on the 2nd of November 1883 to recover moneys alleged to be due to M, G & K' jointly on an account acknowledged and signed in 1880.

On the face of these plaints the three joint-creditors were named as co-plaintiffs. The names of G & A' had not been struck out, nor did they, or either of them, attempt to repudiate the suits. But still it was contended that A' ought not to be treated as a co-plaintiff from the commencement of the litigation.

It appeared that, having named K as co-plaintiff, M presented petitions asking for permission to prosecute the suits on behalf of A', relying, as appeared by the plaints, on S. 30 of C. P. C. of 1882, which only applied "when a suit is brought by one person on behalf of other persons having joint interests, but not named as co-pluintiffs." Notice of the petitions was given to K, and he being named as coplaintiff already asked to be made a plaintiff. By some oversight orders to that effect were made on the 8th January, 1884.

It was contended on the strength of the above-mentioned facts that the suit was originally defective for want of parties, that K became a party to the suits only on 8th January, 1884, when it was too late, and that the suits were therefore barred by limitation.

Held, reversing the court below, that A', as well as G, became a party, as plaintiff, on the 2nd of November, 1883; and that the suits therefore were not barred by lapse of time.

The orders dated 8th January, 1884 making K a plaintiff were merely waste paper. These various experiments or blunders cannot, in their Lordships' opinion, affect the real position of the parties, which is plain on the face of the record. The question is simply this :-When was it that K became a party to these suits? If it was on the 2nd of November, 1883, the suits were in time. If it was not till the 8th of January, 1884, they were too late. Their Lordships think that K, as well as G, became a party, as plaintiff, on the 2nd of November, 1883. (Lord Macnaghten.) right to the pyne as an artificial watercourse, and to the u-e of the water flowing through it; and that the obstructions complained of were unauthorised and were an interruption of the plaintiff's right. The High Court, concurring in the Munsif's finding that the obstructions had existed for more than two years before suit, dismissed the suit as regards them, apparently basing its judgment on Art. 34 of Part V of the second schedule of the Limitation Act of 1871, which limits the time for bringing suits for the obstruction of watercourses to two years "from the date of the obstruction".

Held that the decision of the High Court was clearly

A suit brought to declare a right of pre-emption against the heir of a mortgagee by conditional sale, who has fore-closed, is governed, where the subject of the sale does not admit of physical possession and there is no registered instrument of sale, not by article 10 but by article 120 of schedule II of the Indian Limitation Act (XV of 1877), and limitation in such a suit runs from the expiration of the year of grace, that being the period when the right of the montgagee has become mature; the mere fact that he has not enforced that right by a suit for possession is immaterial. Art. 10 of the Limitation Act is inapplicable to the case, because the mortgagee's heir had no semblance of physical possession in the true and natural sense of the term (256).

Art. 144 does not also apply because claims of pre-emption are specially considered in Art. 10, and although this particular claim of pre-emption does not (for the reasons already stated) fall within it, that does not affect the construction of Art. 144 as illustrated by Art. 10 (256). —Axts. 10 and 144 — Applicability — Pre-emption— Suit to enforce right of —Plaint praying for possession "by setting aside the competing right."

A claim to enforce a right of pre-emption is, as Art. 10 of the Limitation Act shows, a claim impeaching another's right; and its primary object is to set aside the competing right. The circumstance that a plaint inverts the proper order, and instead of first asking the setting aside and then asking possession as the consequence, asks for possession "by setting aside" cannot alter the nature of the action, so as to make it a suit for possession of immoveable property within the meaning of Art. 144 (256). It would be somewhat difficult for a case to be figured in which out of the fact of mutural error there had in effect been a two-fold result, namely, (1) that a statutory requirement had been jumped over, and (2) that a limitation as from the date of a nullity had begun to run against one of the parties to the error. The policy of Art. 11 of the Limitation Act of 1877 evidently is to secure the speedy settlement of questions of title raised at execution sales, and for that reason a year is fixed as the time within which the suit must be brought (127). -Property ordered to be uttached but not attached de facto-Claim to-Order rejecting-Inapplicability of article to.

It is a necessity of the order specified in Art. 11 (1) of the Limitation Act of 1908 that the property to which a claim is made, or to the attachment of which there is an objection, must be property which had been de facto attached, for the only property referred to is "property attached in execution". Unless there has been attachment, there can be no order made on an objection lodged to it, nor can any claim be made to the property so attached; and without such an order, there is no terminus a quo for the running of limitation, and with this the limitation itself is non-existent.

Where, though a conditional attachment before judgment was ordered, none was actually made, but the parties were under a mistaken impression that there was an attachment, and, under that mistaken impression, a mortgagee of the property the attachment of which was ordered put in a claim petition which was, however rejected on the ground that the mortgage was a sham transaction, held that Art. 11 of the Limitation Act had no application to the order made on that claim petition. A sale was held under Bengal Act VII of 1880 by the Collector on 24-9-1882. The owner of the property applied to the Commissioner on 26-9-1882, not to confirm the sale. That petition was refused, and the sale was confirmed by the Commissioner on 2-5-1884. The owner then presented a revision petition to the Board of Revenue against the Commissioner's order. At first the Board of Revenue set aside the Commissioner's order on 12-8-1884, and referred the matter back to the Collector to consider the case upon its merits. But, on the case again coming up before then the Board of Revenue reversed their previous decision and revived the order of the Commissioner, dated 25-1-1884 refusing to set aside the sale. The last order of the Board of Revenue was on 21-8-1886.

Held that for the purpose of the law of limitation there was no final or definitive confirmation of the sale until 21 8-1886, the date of the last order of the Board of Revenue, and that a suit brought to set aside the sale on the ground of non-compliance with the provisions of Bengal Act VII of 1880 within 1 year of 21-8-1886 was not barred under Art. 12 of the Limitation Act of 1877.

There was no final, conclusive and definitive order confirming the sale, while the question whether the sale should be confirmed was in litigation, or until the order of the Commissioner of 25-1-1884 became definitive and operative by the final judgment of the Board of Revenue on 21-8-1886. In fact there was not during the period which had elapsed between the date of the sale and 21-8-1886 any sale to set aside which a suit could have been brought by the parties

In execution of a decree made in a suit among the heirs of Maish, an order was made for placing one of them, A, in possession of a part of a village. Under color of that order, A disturbed the possession of Moti, who claimed the village against Maish. Moti applied in the execution proceedings to protect his possession, and an order was made on 1-11-1886, allowing Moti's application on the ground that A could not use an order made as between her and her coheirs for the purpose of dispossessing one who was a stranger to Maish's estate and to the litigation between his heirs. In a suit subsequently brought by the representative in interest of Maish against Moti for a declaration of his (Maish's) preferential right to the property, held that the suit was not barred by Art. 13 of the Limitation Act on the ground that it was brought more than a year after the order in Moti's favour, dated 1-11-1886.

The suit does not pray, and the plaintiff need not pray, any relief of that sort. The order remains wholly unaffected. It was quite right to hold (as the order of Nov. 1886 did) that A had wrongfully disturbed Moti's possession; but the right of Maish or of anybody claiming under him to bring a suit within any time allowed by law for suits to recover property was quite unaffected by that. -Applicability-Conversion by A of movables of B-Sale thereof by C as A's agent-B's suit against C for recovery of sale proceeds in his hands-Right of-Limitafrom for.

The plaintiffs instituted a suit against M for the conversion of timber belonging to them and obtained a decree for a certain sum of money against his widow brought on record after his death as his legal representative. Not having obtained full satisfaction of their decree in execution, they sued the appellant, the brother of M, alleging that the timber misappropriated by M had come into the hands of the appellant after his death, that the appellant had sold the same, and that the money which was the proceeds of the sale of the timber was in the hands of the appellant, and had not been paid over by him to M's widow. The plaintiffs prayed for the recovery of the said proceeds from the appellant. There was no dishonest misappropriation or conversion by the appellant. He sold the timber, and received the procoeds as the agent of M's widow.

Held that the plaintiffs had a right to follow the proceeds of their timber, and that the appellant having received the money, and not having paid it over to N's widow, they had a right to recover the amount from him (64).

The suit is to enforce an equitable claim on the part of the plaintiffs to follow the proceeds of their timber, and finding them in the hands of the appellant, to make him responsible for the amount. That comes within Art. 118 of the Act. The plaintiffs had a right at any time within six years from the time when the defendant received the money to hold him responsible to them for the amount so long as it remained in his hands; they might have given him notice not to pay it over, and held him responsible in equity if he had done so (65). In a case in which the appellant and the respondents were joint obligees of a bond for 3 laklis and odd, dated 21-7-1849, the respondents in December, 1850, received from the debtor a sum of 2 lakhs of rupees, and gave a receipt therefor as entitled to their share of the debt. In actions brought separately by the appellant and the respondents for their shares respectively of the balance, the first court decided that the 2 lakhs received by the respondents must (against the debtor) be appropriated to the whole debt, the result being to cut down the claim of the appellant by Rs. 25,000, and to enlarge the claim of the respondents by Rs. 16,000. The appellant appealed to the High Court in his suit against that decree. While that appeal was pending, the appellant and the respondents compromised certain suits then pending between them as to a partition of their estates, By that compromise the appellant in effect said that he was trying to get back his share of the debt aforesaid in his appeal to the High Court against the debtor, that that being so, the compromise was not to affect that in any way whatever, and that, if any claim should arise out of the result of that appeal, any question upon that was reserved as between him and the respondents.

In December, 1863 the High Court in the appeal by the appellant against the debtor, affirmed the decree below. Thereupon the appellant sued the respondents, in August, 1864, for the recovery of the loss caused to him by the receipt by the respondents of the sum of 2 lakks on account of all of them.

Med, that from November, 1882, the date of the deed of compromise between the appellant and the respondents there could be no question as to the Statute of Limitations, as there was, by contract between the parties, reserved and kept open until the decision of the appellant's appeal against the debtor was arrived at, and very reasonably so, because, if the appellant had succeeded in that appeal in getting the money from the debtor, he would have had no manner of claim whatever against the respondents (353). In 1822. A purchased at a Government sale, at Calcutta, a quantity of salt, part of a larger portion then lying in the ware house of the vendors (the Government) where the salt was to be he delivered. By the conditions of sale, it was declared, that on payment of the purchase-money, the purchaser should be furnished with permits to enable him to take possession of the salt; there was also a stipulation that the salt purchased should be cleared from the place of delivery within twelve months from the day of sale, otherwise the purchaser was to pay ware-house rent for the quantity then afterwards to be delivered. The purchaser paid the purchase-money, and received permits for the delivery of the salt, which was delivered to him in various quantities, down to the year 1831; in which year an inundation took place, which destroyed the salt in the ware-house, and there remained no salt to satisfy the contract. The purchaser petitioned the vendors for a return of the purchase money which was refused on the ground that the loss happened through his negligence in not sooner clearing the salt from the ware-house. An inquiry, however, took place at the instance of the Government, who referred the matter to the Salt Collector for a report. This inquiry was made by the Government without the parchaser being a pasty to The Collector did not make his report till the year 1838 and upon that report, the Government refused to return the purchase-money claimed in respect of the deficient salt. The purchaser then brought an action of assumpsit for recovery of the purchase-money of such part of the salt as had not been delivered, alleging, as a breach, the non-delivery thereof. To this the defendants pleaded the Statute of Limitation. The Supreme Court at Calcutta found a verdict for the plaintiff.

Held, upon appeal, reversing such verdict, that when the purchaser applied for the residue of the salt, and was told that there was none to deliver, the contract was broken, and the cause of action accrued from the time of such breach, and that the sub-equent inquiries by the Government did not suspend the operation of the Statute of Limitations till the year 1838, the time of the final refusal; that the remedy was barred by the Statute. BENGAL PUTNI TALUQ REGL. VIII OF 1819-SALE UNDER-REVERSAL OF-PURCHASER'S SUIT AGAINST ZEMINDAR FOR RECOVERY OF SUMS PAID.

-Limitation-Starting point-First Court decree reversing sale-Appellate decree affirming-Deprivation of possession-Dates of.

On 14-5-1904, a putni taluq was sold for arrears of rent under Bengal Regulation VIII of 1819. The purchaser paid in the entire amount of the purchase money, and on 23.5 1904, he received a certificate of payment under S. 15 of that Regulation. On 28-5 1904, he received the usual order for possession. On June 30 following, however, a darpatnidar sued the Zemindar for the reversal of the sale. Three similar suits for the same purpose were instituted by other darpatnidars in July and August. A decree for reversal of the sale was passed in each of those suits, that in the first suit being dated on 24 8-1905, and those in the others being passed on 28-8-1906. An appeal to the High Court in the first suit was dismissed on 3-8-1906.

On 14-9-1908 the purchaser sued to recover from the Zemindar the aggregate of several sums of money being (a) the amount of rent arrears due and paid by the Collector to the Zemindar out of the purchase money; (b) the expenses of the sale appropriated by the Collector out of the purchase money; (c) the putni rents paid to the Zemindar subsequent to the sale; and (d) interest on those several sums and on the balance of purchase money left in the hands of the Collector.

The cause of action was stated in the plaint to be the reversal of the sale. By the decision in the first suit the sale was reversed in its entirety and for all purposes irrespective of the decrees in the later courts. The purchaser gave up possession of the taluq to the darpatnidars on 28 8-1906. The suit was throughout treated as governed by Art. 97 of the Limitation Act of 1908. Their Lordships also treated the case as falling under Art. 97. The only question which their Lordships considered and decided was what was the starting point of limitation for the suit, whether it was (1) the date of the original decree in the first suit, 24-8-1905, or (2) the date of the appellate decree therein 3-8-1906, or (3) the date on which the purchaser gave up possession, 28-8-1906.

Held, affirming the courts below, that the failure of consideration was on 24-8-1905, the date of the first court's decree in the first suit, that time began to run from that date, and that the suit was barred,

There may be circumstances in which a failure to get or retain possession may justly be regarded as the time from which the limitation period should run, but that is not the case here. The quality of the possession acquired by the present purchaser excludes the idea that the starting point is to be sought in a disturbance of possession or in any event other than the challenge to the sale and the negation of the purchaser's title to the entirety of what he bought involved in the decree of 24-8-1905. If further support of this view be required, it may be found in the express provision of S. 14 of the Regulation which directs that in the suit for reversal itself the purchaser is to be indemnified against all loss. — Hindu joint family governed by Mithila law-Father and manager of—Sale of family property by, invalid against other members—Purchaser's suit to recover purchase-money in case of—Limitation—Starting point of —Date of sale—Date on which purchaser found himself unable to obtain possession.

On the 1st of August, 1879, D, the father of the respondents and the Kurta of a Mithila joint Hindu family consisting of the respondents and others, sold to the appellant a portion of the joint family property in consideration of a sum of money then paid by him to D. The appellant applied to the Collector for mutation of the share purchased into his name, but, on objections made by the respondents, that application was dismissed. Thereupon the appellant instituted a suit on the 10th March, 1881, against D and the other members of his family, including the respondents, for possession of the share purchased by him. The Sub-Judge decreed the suit; the District Judge dismissed it on the ground that II had no authority without the consent of his co-sharers to sell a portion of the joint family property in order to raise money on his own account, and not for the benefit of the family; and on appeal by the appellant to the High Court that court dismissed the appeal. On the 4th of March, 1885, the appellant instituted the suit out of which the appeal arose against the respondents, the surviving members of D's family for the recovery of his purchasemoney and interest. The question was whether the suit was barred by the Law of Limitation.

Held that the case fell either within Art. 62 or Art. 97 of the Limitation Act of 1877 and that the suit was barred (164).

If there never was any consideration, then the price paid by the appellant was money had and received to his account by D within the meaning of Art. 62. But their Lordships are inclined to think that the sale was not necessarily void, but was only voidable if objection were taken to it by the other members of the joint family. If so, the consideration did not fail at once, but only from the time when the appellant endeavoured to obtain possession of the property, and being opposed, found himself unable to obtain possession. There was then, at all events, a failure of consideration, and he would have had a right to sue at that time, to recover back his purchase-money upon a failure of consideration; and therefore, the case appears to them to be within the enactments of Art. 97. The presamptive reversioner to an Oudh estate obtained a decree declaring his right to succeed to the estate on the death of the last surviving widow of the last male holder of the estate. After obtaining that decree, but before the death of the last surviving widow, the reversioner executed a sale deed in respect of a portion of the estate, undertaking by the deed to deliver possession of the portion sold when he succeeded to the estate. The sale deed being invalid and ineffectual to pass title, the question arose as to the limitation period applicable to the vendee's claim for compensa-The suit was instituted within 3 years of the date on which the vendee's demand for possession was resisted. The Courts below held that the limitation period ran from the date of the payment of the purchase money or the date of the execution of the sale deed, and that in either view the suit was barred under Art. 62 or Art. 97 of the Limitation Act.

Held, reversing the Courts below, that in the peculiar circumstances of the case, time began to run only from the date when the vendee's demand for possession was resisted, and that the claim was not barred.

There was a misapprehension as to the private rights of the vendor in the portion which he purported to sell by the deed of sale, and the true nature of those rights were not discovered by the sendee or his widow, the plaintiff, earlier than the time at which the vendee's demand for possession was resisted. It was thus that the agreement was discovered to be void, and the discovery in their Lordships' view was one within the words and the meaning of S. 65 of the Contract Act. (Sir Lawrence Jonkins.) #### Arts. 66. 132.

- Applicability - Mertgage - Personal Trability under - Claim to enterior.

In a suit to enforce a mortgage, by which certain property was pledged to the mortgagee for a mortgage debt, the plaintiff sought two remedies, one against the mortgaged property, and the other by rendering the other property and the person of the defendant liable. By the mortgage deed the mortgager gave the mortgages a pledge of certain fixed immoreable property, and also gave as a further security his personal hand or covenant.

Held that Art, 65 of the Limitation Act of 1871, applicable to money demands, applied to the plaintiff's demand for a personal remedy against the mortgagor (14).

It was contended that the period of 12 years given by Art. 132 of the said Act applied to every remedy which the instrument carried with it, and gave 12 years for the personal remedy against the mortgaged property. Looking at the previous language with reference to personal suits, and at the language of Art. 132, their Lordships must read the latter as having reference only to suits for money charged on immoveable property to raise it out of that property (15). ### LIMITATION ACT 1X OF 1908—(Centd.) Art. 85—(Contd.)

MUTUAL, OPEN AND CURRENT ACCOUNT-(Contd.)

——Principal and Agent—What amounts to such accounts between—Balance due on such accounts—Principal's suit against Agent for—Limitation.

The suit was brought on 28.2-1871 by the appellant, as manager of the estate of C. and Co., against the respondents, to recover a sum of money, alleged to be the balance of an account due from the respondents to C and Co. The question for decision was whether or not the plaintiff's claim was barred, at least as to many items of the account, by the clause of Act XIV of 1859, which prescribed a three years' limitation for suits for breaches of contract, money lent, and the like.

The coerse of dealing between C. and Co. and the respondents was regulated, at all events after that date, by the agreement of 17.5.1867. Under the agreement the course of dealing between C. and Co. and the respondents was the ordinary course of dealing between principal and agent; C. and Co. being often in advance on account of their principals; and being, on the other hand, responsible for the proceeds of the timber sent down from the forests to them for the purpose of sale, and sold by them. The agreement, which started with an admitted balance of Rs. 44,000, clearly contemplated the existence of an account curtent between the two firms containing mutual items of debit and credit. The 9th clause of it contained a distinct stipulation that on the adjustment of the accounts the respondents should be bound to pay such balance as might be then found due from them. The account was accordingly kept as one continuous account, and there were several items which brought the mutual dealings down to March or May, 1868.

Held that the plaintiff's claim did not fall within the three years' limitation 350.

It would be a misapplication of the law to treat the claim as barred as to some, and valid as to other items of the account. The acount was one continuous account between principal and agent, with debits and credits on each side of it, and the contract was to pay the balance of that account when it should be struck. The case therefore falls within S. 8 of Act XIV of 1839 (359-60) (Sir James W. Colvile.) WATSON p. AGA MEHEDEE SHERAZEE.

Art. 89.

AGENT-SUIT FOR ACCOUNTS AGAINST.

- Limitation - Starting point - Termination of agency.

The appellant and the respondent were two brothers, who remained joint in all their estate until 1882, and in business till 1885. The evidence showed that each acted for the other in the receipt of the profits of their estate, and, when necessary for more important matters, powers-of-attorney were granted by the one to the other. On 22nd December, 1885, appellant brought a suit for, inter alia. the recovery of his share of a certain item of the joint estate. To this suit the respondent, besides limitation, pleaded that the brothers had been joint owners, that there must be a general account between them as partners, and that no action could lie for what was only one item in an account. On 9th November, 1888, the respondent himself brought a suit against the appellant for an account and payment of the balance.

Held that Art. 89 of the Limitation Act governed the respondent's suit and that it was not barred by limitation.

The two brothers were agents the one of the other in dealing with the joint estate. The evidence of the appellant shows that the relation of agency continued down

-Principal's sons-Suit by, after his death-Periol for which agent liable to account-No demand and refusal during lifetime of principal or after his death.

The appellant's father, N, was the owner of one movety and his uncles, the respondent and C, were the owners of the other moiety of a lakhraj estate. In or about the year 1894, N entered into an agreement with the respondent under which the respondent was appointed agent for the purpose of collecting rents and profits from the forest Land comprised in the estate, rendering accounts of his manage-ment from time, to time to N. N died in July 1899. He left three sons, the appellants, two of whom were minures and did not attain age until the hearing of the suit by the first Court. For about 2 years after the death of the appellant's father, the respondent managed the property on the same terms as before. The agency was terminated by a notice dated 16th January, 1902. In September, 1904, the appellants commenced the suit out of which the appeal arose against the respondent claiming a declaration that the respondent was liable to render accounts to the plaintiffs of the amount realised in respect of the said property for the whole period of the agency.

The Sub-Judge ordered an account of the income and expenditure in regard to the Forest Mahal from the month of July-August 1896 to the month of January 1902. The High Court on appeal varied the decree so as to limit the account to five months from August 1901 to January 1902,

Held, that the decree of the Sub-Judge ought to be restored (7).

It was not argued that, after the death of N in July 1899, the position of the respondent was altered or that he became a trustee in place of an agent. Consequently, Article 89 of the Limitation Act, 1877, applies, and the only point for decision is whether the provisions contained in this Article protect the respondent against a liability to render accounts from the month of July-August 1896 and limit his liability to render accounts from August 1901 (7).

In Article 89 of the Limitation Act, the period of limitation is three years from the date when the account is demanded, or from the conclusion of the agency. It appears doubtful how far there had been any demand and refusal during the lifetime of N, but in any case at the date of his death his representatives would have been entitled to demand an account for a period of three years. There is no evidence of any kind that a demand and refusal of accounts were made by or on behalf of the appellants after the death of N (7-8). (Lord Parmour.) NOBIN CHANDRA BARUA (1916) 44 C. 1= D. The grantee of a village from a Zemindar under a grant made in lieu of maintenance died childless, having previously executed a permanent pottalt in respect thereof to k. The grant being only one for life, R's tenure came to an end at latest on the death of the grantee. But R was left in possession by the grantor's successor, and by P, the son of the latter. It appeared from the evidence that Rhad been so allowed to remain in possession as a mokurrari tenant for his life.

P brought a soit for a declaration of his rights after the death of R in the village. A' died pending the suit, and, on his death, the plaint was amended, and a prayer for possession was added.

Held, that the suit, as amended, was not barred under Art. 91 of the Limitation Act.

R having been allowed to remain in possession as a mokurrari tenant for his life, no suit could have been brought for recovery of possession until A's death. With regard to the plea of limitation, it was said that P's father and afterwards P might have sued for a declaration of his right to possession on R's death under S. 39 of the Specific Relief Act at any time after the death of the grantee under the grant for maintenance, and that the suit as originally framed was in fact one of that character. The answer to this contention is that, though such an action might have been brought, the Zemindar was not bound to bring it, and there was no necessity for him to do so. The pottah (whatever its construction) had become a spent instrument, and had no longer any validity as a grant of the property. (Lord Datey.) MAHARANI BENI PERSHAD KOERI E. A plaintiff who contends that an arbitrator has no power to make an unauthorised addition to an award already made and sought to be enforced by him is not in any sense seeking to cancel or set aside the award within the meaning of Art. 91 of the Limitation Act. Neither does the contention that a particular clause in the award is altra vires and invalid bring the case within the Article.

In a suit for partition of properiies dealt with by an award, the plaintiffs alleged that a clause in it restraining partition was invalid in law and that another portion of it was a subsequent illegal addition to the award as originally made and in other respects his claim was in terms of the award and not in contravention of it,

Held, that the suit was not to set aside the award within the meaning of Art. 91 of the Limitation Act but to enforce it so far as it was legally valid.

SALE DEED-VENDOR'S SUIT TO SET ASIDE-(Contd.)

The suit, which was instituted in 1884, was to set aside a sale executed in 1872 by the 1st plaintiff and to recover possession of the properties conveyed thereunder. The 2nd plaintiff was the wife of the 1st, and claimed under a gift deed executed by him. The case of the 2nd plaintiff was, that the value of the property was such that, having regard to the amount that was given first, the sale was an unconscionable bargain on the part of the purchaser, affording evidence that the transaction was a fraudulent one on his part, and was brought about by the exercise of undue influence by him, and that in fact he procured the 1st plaintiff to be surrounded by persons in the purchaser's own interest, and acting for him, and the 1st plaintiff was not in a condition to have, and had not the advice which he ought to have had.

The plaint gave as the date of the fraud having come to 2nd plaintiff's knowledge, 772., 25-8-1882. The facts relied upon by the plaintiffs were, however, facts which must have been known long before 25-8-1882, and it was not alleged that any new matter was then discovered.

A. for the purpose of obtaining possession, together with mesne profits, of certain lands alleged to have been conveyed to her by her husband, was decreed by the High Court in her favour by a written judgment, dated 27th July, 1864. Before the date of the written judgment, but after an oral judgment had been pronounced, that is, on 17th July, 1864, the lady executed a hibbanama or deed of conveyance to one P, of a 6-anna share in the decree, in consideration of an advance by him. In 1865 P applied, upon the strength of that hibbanama, to be admitted as a respondent in the appeal to the Privy Council preferred by A, the husband, against the decree of the High Court. That application was opposed by A, but finally an order was made in 1866, permitting P to be added as a respondent, but declaring it to be open to d to bring an action or any proceeding he might think fit, at any time, for the purpose of setting aside the hibbanama, which A disputed.

In a suit brought by A in the year 1875 to set aside the hibbanama on the ground that it was false and fabricated, held that the suit was a sait to declare the forgery of the hibbanama within the meaning of Art. 93 of the Limitation

Held further that when P, in the year 1865, set up the hibbanama, and insisted upon it for the purpose of being made a respondent in the suit, and when that application was opposed by A, and, the parties being heard, P succeeded in his attempt to become a respondent, without prejudice, in the words of the order, to any action or proceeding to be brought by A, that was an attempt to enforce the deed within the meaning of the said Article, and that limitation for the suit began to run from that date (206).

Very soon after, however, B declined to complete the purchase, on the ground that the deed was not in accordance with the contract, and demanded what was owing to him. The quarrel between them was not about the retention by the respondent of his debt as part payment, and the payment by B of the balance, but about other matters. Thereupon the respondent sned B for specific performance of the contract and for a decree directing B to pay the balance of the price after setting off the delt due by him to B. The Sub-Judge decreed the suit on 24 2-1881; on appeal, the High Court reversed his decree and dismissed the suit on 14-3-1884, on the ground that there was no binding and enforceable contract between the parties. In a suit instituted by B on 10.9 1884 for the recovery from the respondent for the recovery of his debt with interest, held that the suit was not barred by limitation.

The decree of the High Court in 1884 brought about a new state of things, and imposed a new obligation on the respondent. He was now no longer in the position of being able to allege that his debt to B had been wiped out by the contract, and that instead thereof B was entitled to the property. He became bound to pay that which he had retained in payment for his land. And the matter may be viewed in either of two ways, according to the terms of S. 65 of the Contract Act, or according to the terms of Art. 97 of the Limitation Act. (Lord Hobbonse.) ——Guardian—Mertgag, of minor's property by, declared and in minor's ant—Money astranced under—Suit to recover, from guardian—Limitation—Starting point.

On 6.8-1507, the appellant and her busbond advanced Rs. 10,000 to the 1st respondent, a Mahomedan woman, then alleging herself to be the guardian of one M, her nephew, then a minor. She, as guardian of the said minor. executed in favour of the appellant and her husband a mortgage of two oil wells, professedly belonging to the said minor, to secure repayment of the money advanced with interest. The 1st respondent did for some time pay to the appellant and her husband the interest agreed by them to be payable on the money lent. Default in this respect having been made, appellant and her husband, on 5-2-1913, took proceedings, claiming the principal and interest as due from the 1st respondent and the minor. In that suit the Ist respondent made written admission of the debt. On 8.7-1913, a decree was passed in that suit as claimed. In execution of that decree the oil wells were sold by auction and purchased by one T, who afterwards resold them to the appellant and her husbond, who thus got possession of them. In or about April, 1915, however, M. the minor, sued the appellant and her husband and the 1st respondent to set aside the sale of the oil wells and for a declaration that the mortgage of 0.8-1907 was not binding on him. That suit was finally decreed on 11-3-1918 by the appellate Court, on the ground that the 1st respondent was not legally M's guardian and had no authority to mortgage his oil wells or to represent him in the suit on the mortgage. The appellant had thereupon to give up possession of the oil wells. The appellant's husband baying died, she, on 9-8-1919, brought the suit under appeal against the 1st respondent, the plaint submitting that, as the money borrowed by her could not be recovered from the minor, she should repay it with interest, and stating that the cause of action arose on 11-3-1918, when the appellate Court set aside the sale.

Held that the suit was for an existing consideration which afterwards failed within the meaning of Art. 97 of the Limitation Act of 1908, and that, having been brought within 3 years of the date of the failure of the consideration, it was not barred.

The facts of the case show that the appellant and her husband were, from the date of the loan (6-8-1907), down to 11-3-1918, not entitled to allege that they had not received any consideration for the loan that they had made—since for a considerable time they had actually received interest upon it, paid to them by the respondent. There was at the time of the loan no failure of the consideration upon which the loan of the money and the promise to repay it with interest were made—since the obligation of that promise was for some time observed—and the failure of consideration for the loan of the money did not occur until 11-3-1918 (151). DEMAND FOR.

-Abertity suit if a.

Querre, whether an aboutive suit by a Mahomedan wife against her husband for the recovery of prompt dower is a demand by way of action within the meaning of the statute which prescribes the period of limitation for a suit for the recovery of such dower (238). #### DEMAND AND REFUSAL.

- Wife's application for leave to sue in forma pauperis for such Jover-Counter of husband denying liability filed in.

An application by a Mahomedan wife for permission to sue her bushand in forma pauperis for the recovery of her prompt dower was rejected by the Court on the ground that she had sufficient means.

Medd that the application did not amount to a demand by way of action sufficient to constitute a cause of action within the meaning of the statute, and that the fact that the husband, by his counter-petition, denied his liability to pay the dower and objected to the amount claimed did not alter the character of the proceedings (239-40).

The application of the wife is an expression, and a strong expression, of an intention to sue the husband in that form if she is permitted to do so, but it does not amount to a demand by way of action until she has that permission. And unless she had made a previous demand, no amount of opposition on the part of the husband would be sufficient to constitute a cause of action (239.40). (Sir Montague E. Smeik.) SUIT FOR-LIMITATION-CAUSE OF ACTION.

—The suit was by a Mahomedan widow for the re covery of prompt dower from the heirs of her deceased husband. The question was whether the suit was or was not barred by limitation.

The husband died on 21-2-1854—more than 6 years, and less than 12 years, before the commencement of the suit. No divorce between the deceased and the plaintiff was proved. The suit was commenced on 3-9-1860, and the period of limitation was that fixed by Reg. III of 1793, S. 14, 272., 12 years.

Held that the suit was not barred (136, 140). (Sir Barnes Peaceck.) MUSSUMAT MULLEEKA 7: MUSSUMAT JUMEELA. (1872) Sup. I.A. 135 = 11 B.L.R. 375 = 5 W R. 23 = 3 Sar. 220 = III C.G. Sup. Vol. 82 = 2 Suth. 766.

-Prompt dower is said to be exigible immediately. Macnaghten, in his principles of Mahomedan law, says: "Where it has not been expressed whether the payment of the dower is to be prompt or deferred, it must be held that the whole is due on demand." The word "exigible" implies that it may, not that it must, be exacted, and therefore it would seem that a cause of action in respect of it does not accrue so long as the marriage exists, until the wife does something to show that she requires it to be paid. According to the Mahomedan law a woman may refuse herself to her husband as a means of obtaining so much of her dower as is prompt. That is a mode of exacting it. But she is not obliged to adopt it. It is optional with her either to insist upon the payment of her prompt dower during her husband's lifetime, or to wait until the dissolution of the marriage (138-9). In Macnaghten's Precedents of Mah-medan law, it is said: "The dower becomes due on the consummation of the marriage, or the death of either of the parties, or on divorce. Should the wife not claim the payment of it during the lifetime of her husband, it must be paid to her out of the property left by him on his decease

Held, therefore, that, in respect of prompt dower payable under the Mahomedan law, limitation does not begin to run before the dower is demanded, or the marriage is dissolved by death or otherwise (140). -Prompt or exigible dower may be considered a debt always due and demandable, and certainly payable on demand, and, therefore, upon a clear and unambigious demand and refusal a cause of action would accrue, and the Statute would begin to run (239). Payment on demand- Proxition in deed of dower for. The material part of a deed of dower executed by a deceased Mahomedan in favour of the respondent on the occasion of his marriage with her was as follows :- " I acknowledge myself justly a debtor for the dower of my said wedded wife, to the amount of Rs. 46,000 of the present currency, the moiety whereof is Rs. 23,000, and the amount I acknowledge to be justly due, and when demanded by my said wedded wife, in the payment thereof, I will raise no objection, no excuse make, but will deliver the same to my said wedded wife."

Held that, upon the true construction of the deed, the respondent had a right of suit as regards the dower without a previous demand, and that she was not obliged to sue her husband immediately or in his lifetime (229).

It was contended that the form of the deed by the Mahomedan law was to make the dower exigible immediately, not only due but at once demandable, and that twelve years, the period of limitation, having expired during the lifetime of the husband, the claim to dower was barred under S. 14 of the Regulation of Limitation, III of 1793. It is important to consider how inconvenient it would be if a married woman was obliged to bring an action against her husband upon such an instrument; it would be full of danger to the happiness of married life (228-9). The suit for the profits was originally instituted against the manager under the Oudh Talookdars' Relief Act, but the estate having, during the pendency of the suit, been released from management, and handed over to the respondent. a fresh summons was issued and served upon the respondent.

The plaintiff contended that his dispossession by the manager under the Oudh Talookdars' Relief Act was in the nature of a dispossession under a decree, because the Settle ment Officer, or the manager acting under the said. Act, was acting, as it were, judicially, and that he was therefore en--Close of fusli year-Date of ascertainment of rent-Other date.

The point of time from which, under. Art 110 of the Limitation Act, the period of limitation for a suit for arrears of rent is to run is that at which the arrear became due. In most cases, no doubt the point of time at which rent becames due is the close of the period in respect of which it is to be paid. But this is not necessarily always the case in India. Legislation, or custom, or express contract, or the special circumstances of any case may make rent become due at a point of time different from the close of the period in respect of which it is to be paid The object of the Limitation Act being presumably to compel people who have actionable claims to sue upon them with due promptitude or to forfeit the right to do so at all, the falling due of rent in such an Act naturally means the falling due of an ascertained rent, which the tenant is under an obligation to pay, and which the landlord can claim and, if necessary, sue for. As long as proceedings under S. 9 of the Madras Rent Rec very Act are pending before the Collector, and, on appeal from him, before the Civil Courts, the rate of rent is in suspense, for no one can say what it will prove to be, and therefore no arrear of rent can be said to have become due within the meaning of Article 110, until those preceedings are finally determined. There is no distinction in this respect between the case in which the pattah tendered has been ultimately approved by the Courts, and the case in which it has been modified.

Where, therefore, a landholder sued his ryot to enforce acceptance of a pattah for faslis 1295 to 1298, and the pattah tendered was modified ultimately by a decree of the High Court, and, within three years of the decree of the High Court but more than three years from the close of the respective faslis, the landlord sued for rent due for the said faslis, held that the arrears became due within the meaning of Article fits. Effect of.

If, in spite of length of possession, an action for use and occupation could be maintained, so loag as a plaintiff could show a good title in himself and a bad one in the oocupier, of what avail would any Statute of Limita-tions be? A man might be barred in an action directly brought to recover the possession, such as ejectment, and yet not be barred when he sued from year to year, for use and occupation, for a compensation for the fruits of the land; because in this the occupation would be referable to the sufferance and permission of the real owner, and so be a good consideration for an implied promise to pay what it was worth. But this clearly could not be; and so here, if no action could be maintained directly to recover the possession of the land, none can be brought to recover the rent, which is the compensation for the occupation-that occupation having been always of one and the same character; in fact, rent-free (219-20). REGISTERED CONTRACT IN WRITING, -Rent due under-Suit for. Ser ARTS, 116, 110, (1916) 44 I. A. 65-44 C. 759 (767-8). STARTING POINT OF.

The sale of a putni talook for an arrear of rent under Regulation VIII of 1819 was set aside on the ground of irregularity in a suit brought for that purpose by the putnidars. The first judgment in the putnidars' suit was on 26-12-1860; the appellate judgment, the final judgment therein 30.6.1863. The effect of the judgment was, that the appellant (the Zemindar) had to pay back the purchase money to the purchaser, with interest; and that the putnidars were again put into possession of the talook. In a suit instituted by the appellant on 5-10-1863 in the Collector's Court under Act X of 1859 for recovery of the arrears of rent due to her for the year 1857-8, held that if the case had arisen in an ordinary Court of law, and the law of limitations to be applied was Act XIV of 1859, the suit would have undoubtedly been within time (252).

The cause of action accrued at the time at which, the sale having been set aside, the obligation to pay this sum of money revived; and whether that time be taken to be the date of the first decree, or the date of the final decree, the present suit would, in either case, have been brought in time (252 3). Until the sale had been finally set aside, the appellant was in the position of a person whose claim had been satisfied; and her suit for the recovery of the arrears might have been successfully met by a plea to that effect (254).

LIMITATION ACT IX OF 1908-(Centd.)

Art. 113.

-Benamidar-Sale to real owner of property held by -Contract by benamidar for, on foot of himself being legal and beneficial owner-Real owner's suit for execution of conveyance and recovery of property-Limitation.

The suit was to recover possession from the defendants of certain villages on payment of such sum, if any, as might be found due. It was instituted on 24th August, 1900.

The suit villages originally belonged to the plaintiff's late father. They were sold in 1883 in Court auction and purchased by the 1st defendant, the purchase being alleged by the plaintiff to have been made on behalf of his father. The 1st defendant had been in possession of the villages from 7th February 1890 up to the date of suit, acting as the absolute owner thereof. On the 28th August, 1888, a contract was entered into between the first defendant and plaintiff's father whereby the former consented to receive a stated sum and sell the suit villages to the plaintiff's father.

The Subordinate Judge held that, upon the true construction of the contract of 28th August, 1888, the 1st defendant was the owner of the suit villages, and agreed to sell the same to plaintiff's father for a stated consideration, to be paid or secured as provided for in the contract, and that the suit being essentially one for the specific performance of the contract, was barred under Article 113 of the Limitation Act. The High Court, on the other hand, held that upon the true construction of the contract the plaintiff was the beneficial owner of the villages and the 1st defendant only the legal owner; that the suit was really one for the possession of immoveable property by a beneficial owner thereof against the legal owner on payment, if necessary, of such sum, if any, as might be found due; and that the execution of a conveyance by the 1st defendant to the plaintiff was not essential, and was unnecessary if he got a decree for the recovery of the villages as beneficial owner. The High Court, accordingly, gave the plaintiff a decree for possession.

Held, reversing the High Court and affirming the Sul-Judge, that upon the true construction of the contract the 1st defendant was the legal and beneficial owner, that the contract was a contract for sale of the villages, and that the suit was one for the specific performance of the contract and was barred under Art. 113 of the Limitation Act (340-1).

Whatever may have been the original nature of the purchase by the 1st defendant or the arrangements entered into to raise the money required for the purchase by him at the execution sale, this contract of 28th August 1888 was a settlement of questions of account in relation to the said villages and other matters, and under the terms of it the first defendant is treated as the legal and beneficial owner. The second clause of the contract further strengthens this construction. It provides that the 1st defendant should rell the villages to plaintiff's father, and the plaintiff's father should purchase the same for the stated sum. "He should not sell to others without the consent of the Maharajulangaru" (plaintiff's father)-a provision which would be mean ingless unless he was the legal and beneficial owner. The fifth clause of the agreement provides for payment of interest on the purchase-money until paid, and that until the principal and interest are paid, the plaintiff's father should mortgage the villages which the 1st defendant had consented to sell, or other villages, etc.-properties which are acceptable to the 1st defendant as security for the said principal and interest-and execute a document therefor.

Their Lordships agree with the Sub Judge that no charge is created by the contract over the villages in question, and that the plaintiff had no right to recover possession of the property absolutely or conditionally on his executing a mortgage deed or making a payment to the 1st defendant. (Lord

A suit for specific performance is essentially a suit for enforcing a stipulated obligation relating to property. The word "contract" itself primarily means a transaction which creates personal obligations, but it may, though less exactly, refer to transactions which create real rights Art. 113 of the Limitation Act is inapplicable to a suit brought for the enforcement of such real rights (16v). -Applicability-Chankidari Chakaran lands resumed by Government and transferred to Zemindar-Puturdar's suit to recover.

The respondent was the putnidar of half and darpatoidar of the other half of village G, and was putnitar of six other villages, all of the said villages being within the zemindary of the appellant. Some of the lands in those villages included in the patnis and the darpatnis were originally held as Chaukidari Chakaran lands, but were subsequently all resumed by the Collector under the Bengal Act VI of 1870, and then transferred to the appellant. On such resumption and transfer to the Zemindar, the respondent, as the patnidar or the darpatnidar, became entitled, under S.51 of Bengal Act VI of 1870, to possession of the Chaukodari Chakaran lands. The respondents' right to possession of the lands being denied, he instituted a suit for recovery of khas possession of the same from the appellant.

Held, that the suit was not one for specific performance of a contract within the meaning of Art. 113 of the Limitation Act, but was a suit for possession of immoveable property within the meaning of Art. 144 thereof.

It does not follow that, because the rights originally arose by virtue of a grant declared to be a contract within the meaning of S. 51, they are therefore rights, contractual in the sense that the contract by its terms creates and regulates the personal obligations and duties of the grantor in the circumstances that have arisen. At the time when the putni grants were made the resumption of the Chaukidari Chakran lands was not even contemplated, and the grant necessarily contains no reference whatever to the circumstances that would arise and the relationships that would exist in the event of the Government resuming possession. Upon resumption of such possession the rights of the putnishar were those conferred on him by the estate and damages-Limitation.

Breach of any contract—Meaning and effect of.

It was urged that the words " breach of contract" in S. 1, cl. 9 of the Limitation Act of 1859 were not there used for the purpose of distinguishing actions founded on contract from actions founded on tort, but for the purpose of distinguishing actions to recover unliquidated damages for breach of contract. from actions to recover debts, and that the enumeration in the clause itself and in the 8th clause of several debts with respect to which the period of limitation is to be three years, proves that it could not have been intended to make the limitation for all debts three years under the words" breach of contract". Much difference of opinion has prevailed among the Judges in India respecting the proper construction to be put on the words " for the breach of any contract" in cl. 9 of S. 1. Their Lordships do not think it necessary or advisable that they should attempt on the present occasion to lay down what is the proper construction of those words as applicable to all cases (142-3). The respondent, as the nearest bandhu or beir of K', sued in 1888 to recover possession of A"r estates from the appellant. K's widow's authority to adopt and the adoption of the appellant were both found against. The appellant contended that nevertheless the suit was barred under Art. 118 of the Limitation Act of 1877, because it was maintained that the suit was one in fact to obtain a declaration that the adoption of the appellant was invalid or had never in fact been made. It was, however, found that the adoption was really made by K's widow of a son to herself and not to her husband.

Held that the plea of limitation could have no application in the suit which related entirely to the husband's estate (53). (Lord Shand.) LUCHMUN LAL CHOWDHRY (1894) 22 I. A. 51= v. KANHYA LAL MOWAR. 22 C. 609 (614)=6 Sar. 558.

The suit was by the nephews of a deceased Mahomedan to recover possession of property appertaining to his estate. The property had admittedly been held by a daughter of the deceased by virtue of a gift made to her by the deceased. The plaintiffs alleged that the property was ancestral property and that by the custom of the tribe to which they belonged the daughter acquired only a life interest in it and that on her death it dovolved on the plaintiffs. The defendant claimed to have been adopted by the said daughter and to be entitled to the property as such adopted son. He further pleaded that the suit was barred under Art. 118 of the Limitation Act of 1877, as the plaintiffs had knowledge of his adoption more than six years before suit. The suit was instituted within a year of the daughter's death.

Held, reversing the Court below, that the omission to bring within the period prescribed by Art. 118 a suit to obtain a declaration that an alleged adoption was invalid, or never, in fact, took place was no har to a suit for pos-session of property. -Interpretation of - Decisions on Art. 118 of Act of 1877-Regard for-Necessity.

The question was whether a suit by a reversionary heir to recover possession of the last male owner's property on the death of his widow which involved the decision of an issue as to the validity or invalidity of the defendant's adoption was a suit to obtain a declaration that an alleged adoption was invalid or never in fact took place within the meaning of Art. 118 of the Limitation Act of 1908.

Prior to the Act of 1908, the Privy Council had held that such a suit was not a suit within the meaning of Art, 118 of the Limitation Act of 1877 (the Act then in force), the language of which Article was identical with that of Art. 118 of the Limitation Act of 1908, Held that, on a question of the interpretation of Art. 118 of the Act of 1908, it was a point of considerable importance to note that the Legislature passed the Act of 1908 with the Article in question in precisely the same language as that used in 1877 after the construction already put upon it by the Privy Council. Article 129 of the Limitation Act of 1871 is expressed as follows:-"To establish or set aside an adoption-twelve years from the date of the adoption, or (at the option of the plaintiff) the date of the death of the adoptive father." Not only is the description of the suit different from that contained in Art. 118 of the two later Acts, but the time from which the limitation begins to run is different (226). The words used in that Article-namely, "to establish or set aside an adoption"-had no technical meaning, and they were treated as expressing popular language to which in popular reasoning the meaning which prevailed could attach.

In the Acts of 1877 and 1908, the matter is, however, otherwise. The words "a suit to obtain a declaration" are terms of Art. They relate back to the Specific Relief Act passed in the same year (1877). S. 42 of the Specific Relief Act deals with declaratory decrees, and illustration (f) is much in point; " A Hindu widow in possession a property adopts a son to her deceased husband. The person presumptively entitled to possession of the property on her death without a son may, in a suit against the adopted son, obtain a declaration that the adoption was invalid." It is to this class of suit that this particular limitation (provided by Art. 118) applies. The date from which the time begins to run is a subjective or personal date; and the condition of obtaining the particular relief which I sought in a declaratory suit is that the plaintiff should not be guilty of laches, the measure of laches being fixed by the statute as 6 years. But a claimant chooses to run the risk that an adoption which he has not attacked will have every presomption made in its favour by reason of its long standing. he can wait till his reversionary right has accrued, and even till the limit (no doubt a very wide limit) of twelve years from that accruer has passed (233). The suit, which was instituted in 1913, was by the Karnavan of a Malabar tarward against the Government for a declaration that certain lands in the forest tracts of South Canara belonged exclusively to his tarwad, and for an injunction restraining the defendant from dealing in any manner with the said lands to the prejudice of the right and possession of the plaintiff's tarwad.

It appeared that in 1903 the Government officials marked off the suit lands and issued to the plaintiff as the Karnavan of his tarwad what was called a "rough" patta, showing the lands to which the Government admitted his right to obtain a grant subject to the usual conditions. The plaintiff preferred objections to the exclusion from the rough patta of the suit lands. His objections were definitely rejected in

Held that the suit, which was to set aside the order of the Government of 1905 rejecting plaintiff's objections to the exclusion from the rough patta of the suit lands and to obtain a declaration of his right, not having been instituted until after 6 years from the date of the said order, the suit was barred under Art. 120 of the Limitation Act of 1908. A Hindu widow in possession of her husband's estate as his heir purported to release immoveable property appertaining to the estate to Government in return for a perpetual malikana. After her death, the daughter of the last male owner sued to establish her right as reversionary heir to the said malikana. The suit was instituted within 6 years of her obtaining the necessary certificate from the Collector under the Pensions Act, 1871.

Held that, even in the view that the malikana was immoveable property, still, in view of the language of the plaint and of the form of the relief sought therein (namely, declaration of the plaintiff's right as regards the malikana amount), the suit was not one for possession or within the operation of Art. 141 of the Limitation Act : that it was governed by Art. 120 of that Act; and that, having been instituted within 6 years of the grant of the certificate under the Pensions Act, it was not barred.

The suit was by the respondent as purchaser at a sale held under Act XI of 1859 to recover possession of a number of bighas alleged to form portion of the property purchased by him, the possession of which was withheld by the defendant appellant. The latter pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation because he and those through whom he claimed had held possession of the suit property adversely to all persons having claims upon it, the right of the defaulter to the suit property had been extinguished by such adverse possession.

Held that the right alleged to have been acquired by adverse possession was only an incumbrance, that the time

On the death on 4-8-1895 of N, an unmarried Hindu minor, who was the last male owner of the Medur estate. V, his mother, became entitled to the same for her life. The Court of Wards had taken charge of the Medur estate during his minority and continued to be in charge of it until December, 1895, when a Receiver, appointed by a civil court, having jurisdiction, took possession of it. The estate continued to be in charge of Receivers, duly appointed, until after 1902. Part of the estate consisted of Government Promissory notes which the Court of Wards had held in respect of moneys received from the Medur estate before August, 1895, the date of the death of N, and of moneys paid into the Bank by the Receivers and the Government Promissory notes and other securities in which moneys derived from the Medur estate were invested under the con trol of the civil court for the benefit of those who might be entitled to the estate.

V's right to inherit the estate of N was disputed by another lady who claimed to be entitled to the estate as the adoptive mother of N. V, therefore, instituted a suit on 21-10-1895 for a declaration that the alleged adoption of N was invalid and also claimed to be placed in possession of the Medur estate with all the savings, appurtenances, etc., of the estate. That suit was finally disposed by the Privy Council in favour of V only in 1913. While that suit was pending, V, in January 1899, executed a will bequeathing legacies to various persons to be paid out of the Government promissory notes and cash accruing to the Medur estate in the custody of Court till that day and the jewels. V died in March, 1899.

In 1916 suits were instituted by the various legatees under her will to recover the legacies bequeathed to them thereby.

Held that the testatrix (V) intended that the legacies should be payable and be paid after the final determination of the suit which she had brought for a declaration that the adoption of N was invalid and to establish her right to the income of the Medur estate, and that, as that litigation was finally determined only in 1913, and the suits were instituted within 3 years thereof, they were not barred under Art. 123 of the Limitation Act of 1908 (225-6, 228).

In the present case no one could have had in his possession or control any fund representing the income of the Medur estate, which I' had had a right to enjoy for her own use but had not received, until it had been finally decided by the Board in 1913, that the adoption of A' was invalid, and there was no other fund (226). "Payable" —" Deliverable" — Meaning of Money with which legacy could be paid — Share to be delivered — Possession of, by person liable to pay or deliver — Necessity.

Art. 123 of the Limitation Act of 1908 allows 12 years from the time" when the legacy or share becomes payable or deliverable," for bringing a suit " for a legacy or for a share of a residue bequeathed by a testator, or for a distributive share of the property of an intestate." Looking at Art. 123. as one of general application to such suits, a similar interpretation must be given to the words "payable" and "deliverable" as used in the Article, and a share in the property of an intestate would not be "deliverable "until the administrator, to whom letters of administration had been granted, had in his hands the share to be delivered, and, similarly, a legacy or share in a legacy does not become " payable " until the executor or other person liable to pay it has in his hands money with which it could be paid (226). A Chinese resident in the Straits Settlements died in 1882 having executed a will in Chinese form in the year 1874. By his will the testator provided that his property was to be dealt with by payment of a very large number of pecuniary legacies and after they had been paid and satisfied, the residue was to be divided into sixty shares. As to 16 of those shares he directed that they should be the means of his maintenance during his lifetime, and should be "kong lin for yearly and other sacrifices after his death." Both by clause 4 and by clause 22 of the testator's will it appeared that he contemplated that this residue should be left undistributed for 16 years. At the expiration of 16 years the testator declared by clause 22 that the income of the shares should "begin to be my sons' and grandsons' (or grand children's) kong lin for yearly sacrifices as well as for sacrifies in spring and autumn.

The plaintiff was the legal representative of a granddaughter of the testator, her grandfather, the testator's son, having died in the testator's lifetime. Her claim, therefore, was as the legal personal representative of one of the female next of kin of the testator, and in that capacity she,in 1916, instituted the suit out of which the appeal arose asking that the gift of the said sixteen-sixtieths of the residue to the "kong lin" should be declared void and distributed among the next of kin.

Held, reversing the Court below, that the suit was barred by virtue of Art. 99 of the Limitations Ordinance which existed in the Straits Settlements (Ordinance No. 6, 1896), Quare whether the starting point of limitation was (1) date of the death of the testator, or (2) the period of division fixed by the testator for the estate, or (3) the period when the trustees had in accordance with the trusts of the will so dealt with the estate that it was ready for division (41).

Their Lordships dissented from the view of the trial Judge that the time ran from the date when the clause was construed by a competent Court, and from that of one of the appellate Judges that the time fixed was when the intestacy was declared by a decree established beyond appeal. "The intestacy, if it exists, has existed throughout, and the distributive share of one of the next of kin has been his to claim from the time when the intestacy arose and not when it was declared." One M.B., a Mahomedan died in 1865 possessed of property, which passed first to his mother, and after her death to his senior and junior widows, of whom each held an eight anna share. The senior widow died on the 24th January, 1888, and after her death, the junior widow retained possession of the whole estate until her death on the 19th December, 1894. The senior widow had a brother named Mubarak who died on the 7th February, 1891. On the death of the junior widow mutation of names was made in favour of three sons of another brother of the senior widow, who died in October, 1890, in respect of a twelve anna share, and in favour of the only son of a third brother of the senior widow, who predeceased her, for the remaining four annas. The plaintiff, a sister of the senior widow, instituted against her said four nephews and others the suit on the 11th Febru ary, 1903, to recover her share of the estate of Mubarak. including in that estate a share of the estate which had been that of M.B., and which Mubarak was said to have inherited from the senior widow, and also property which he took by inheritance from his father.

Held, that with regard to the property taken by Mubarak from the senior widow the period of limitation began to run at soonest, from the death of the junior widew, and not from any earlier period; and that the suit was not barred by limitation. The office of Shebait of a temple was an hereditary one which could not be held by anyone who was not a Brahmin Panda. The Shebait for the time being was, in right of the Shebaitship, entitled to receive a 31 anuas share of the daily surplus income from the offerings to, after defraying the expenses of, the temple, and bound to perform, or to provide for the performance of the sacred worship or puja of the deity at the temple. On the death of the last male holder of the office without male issue, he was succeeded by his widow. In execution of a money decree obtained against her, the 31 annas share aforesaid to which she was entitled as shebait was sold in 1891, and, in right of his purchase, the execution purchaser began to appropriate the said share of the surplus income in 1892. The widow died in 1900, and within 12 years of her death, the reversionary heir of the last male holder of the office sued the execution purchaser inter alia for a declaration that he was entitled to the 34 annas share in the surplus offerings.

Held, reversing the High Court, that the suit was not one for possession of an hereditary office to which Art. 124 of the Limitation Act applied, that the suit was not barred, and that the plaintiff was entitled to the declaration prayed for (273.4).

J. the execution purchaser, was not a Brahmin Panda but was of an inferior caste, and was therefore not competent to hold the office of Shebait of the temple, or to provide for the performance of the duties of that office. The appropriation from time to time by J of the income derivable from the 31 annas share did not deprive the widow, or, after her death, the plaintiff, of the possession of the office of shebait, although that income was receivable by them in right of the shebaitship. The right to the office of Shebait did not arise from, or depend upon, the receipt of a share of the surplus daily income from the officrings to the temple although the right to receive daily a share of the net income from the offerings to the temple was attached to and dependent on the possession of the right to the Shebaitship. The plaintiff was the representative by primogeniture of the Bullav Acharjee community. P, the principal defendant, was a cadet of the same family. The head of the family had the precedence, and was styled the Tickut. The plaintiff was the Tickut at the date of suit. His grandfather named Dowjee, was Tickut in his day. In the year 1825 he paid a visit to Calcutta and presented to his disciples there a consecrated portrait of himself, known as the Thakoor Dowjee, which had ever since been worshipped. The plaintiff claimed that the worship at Colcutta was founded by his grandfather, and that he, as the founder's beir, was entitled by the general law to the shebaitship of that worship; and he instituted the suit out of which the appeal arose for the recovery of the temple, the portrait, and various articles of movable property contained in the said temple. The defendant contended that the suit was not a suit on behalf of Dowjee, the Thakoor, but a personal claim by the plaintiff to moveable chattels, and was barred under Art. 49 of the Limitation Act of 1877.

Held that the suit was not one in which the plaintiff was seeking merely personal relief and that it rather fell under Art 124 or Art. 144 than under Art 49 of the said Act (146).

Even apart from the sixth and seventh paragraphs of the plaint, which expressly put forth the plaintiff's spiritual character as the foundation of his claim, the nature of the suit was for the proper conduct of the Thakoor's worship. It rests quite as much on the right of the Thakoor to have -Arts. 124. 144, 120, S. 10—Applicability—Religious Endocoment—Management of—Suit to establish plaintiff's personal right of, or right to control.

The plaintiff claimed to remove the defendant from the management of the worship and service performed at a temple; to remove the power and control of the defendant from the properties belonging to the temple; and to be declared authorised to appoint a second manager for the purpose of carrying out the object of the endowment. The suit was instituted in September, 1877. The question was whether or not it was barred by limitation.

It appeared that the temple in question was founded by the plaintiff's ancestor prior to the commencement of the 19th century, so that for 80 years or upwards the management had been in the family of the defendant. The plaintiff became the heir, or one of the heirs, of the founder in the year 1847. The defendant's title or possession as manager accrued on the death of his father in the year 1863, when the defendant himself was a child, and under the guardianship of his mother. In 1865, the plaintiff presented a petition, which was for the purpose of having the trusts of the endowment carried into effect by the Collector's Court under Regulation XIX of 1310. That petition alleged that the funds were applied improperly. It was however dismissed for want of jurisdiction. The plaintiff did not then institute any suit in the civil court. Nearly 12 years subsequent to the petition, the plaintiff again sought a remedy in the Revenue Department. He applied to expunge the name of the defendant, who was registered as muahdar of a village appertaining to the temple, and for the entry of the plaintiff's name in lieu of that of the defendant. His claim was dismissed, and thereupon he instituted the suit out of which the appeal arose.

The defendant did not dispute but that the property in question was an endowment appertaining to the temple. He said that the income of it had all along been spent for the purposes of the temple, and the business of the temple was carried on as before. He, however, pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation.

There was no direct or sufficient allegation of misconduct in the pleadings. These was no issue framed upon that point. There was no evidence and no finding that the defendant was not applying the property for the trusts of the endowment. All that was found was that the defendant opposed the right of the plaintiff.

Held, affirming the High Court, that the suit was barred by limitation (96-97).

Their Lordships do not see any reason to differ from the High Court, in thinking that the suit may fall within Art, 123 or Art. 145 of the Limitation Act of 1871, but they desire to express no opinion upon that point. But if it does not fall within either of those sections then the case is caught by the general Art. 118 of the Act of 1871. Therefore either the suit is barred in six years or in twelve years it matters not which, for the cause of action arose at all events before the year 1865 (96-7). (Sir Arthur Hobboust.) Art. 126-Eldest son's attainment of majority-

Suit instituted within 3 years of

The suit was instituted in 1907 by the appellants (4 of them), members of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mithakshara law, to set aside their father's alienation of ancestral property made in 1898 in favour of the 1st respondent, the alienation taking the form of an allotment of the property to the 1st respondent, an utter stranger, at a family partition. It was admitted that possession of the suit property was given to the 1st respondent in 1898, that he enjoyed it exclusively from that time up to the date of suit, and that, previously, since 1887, he (1st respondent) was living as a joint member of the family, and jointly enjoying the profits by reason of the inaction and acquiescence of the appellant's father in that mode of enjoyment. The suit was filed within the expiration of three years after the 1st appellant attained his majority; only the 1st appellant was in existence in 1847, when the 1st respondent was admittedly accepted as a member of the joint family, and all the appellants were minors at the date of the partiton in 1898.

Held, that as the suit was instituted within 3 years of the 1st plaintiff's attaining majority, he was estitled to the benefit of S. 7 of the Limitation Act, and the suit was not barred as against him, and that, if the 1st plaintiff succeeded in the suit, his younger brothers born before a partition of the estate would be entitled to share in the relief. —Eldest son's attainment of majority—Suit brought more than 3 years after.

In a sait brought by the plaintiffs for a declaration that a sale effected by their father was not justified by necessity, the Sub-Judge held that the plaintiffs' claims were harred by the Limitation Act of 1908. S. 7 as F, their eldest brother, had attained majority long before and had not questioned the sale. The High Coart reversed him, and held, following I. L. R. 31 A. 156, as against I. L. R. 16 M, 436 and I. L. R. 38 M. 118, that the conduct of their eldest brother did not affect the undoubted rights of the plaintiffs, and that the suit was therefore not barred.

The plaintiffs (4 in number) and their father were a joint Hindu family governed by the law of the Mithakshara. On 3.—6.—1893, the plaintiffs' father purported to sell ancestral property of the joint family to the predecessor in interest of the defendants. The plaintiffs instituted the suit in June 1920, to recover possession of the property on the ground that the alienation was without legal necessity and was void. The alience took possession of the property on 3-6-1893. The suit was instituted more than 3 years after the first three plaintiffs attained majority and within 3 years of the fourth plaintiff's attaining majority. But the fourth plaintiff was not born till long after the date of the alienation in question.

Held, that the entire suit was barred under Art. 126 of the Limitation Act of 1908.

The cause of action arose on 3—6—1893, and it is from that date that the period of limitation is to be reckoned. The 4th plaintiff's subsequent birth did not create a fresh cause of action or a new starting point from which limitation should be reckoned. The extended period of three years from the cessation of minority provided by Ss. 6 to 8 of the Limitation Act of 1908 can only be claimed by a person entitled to institute the suit at the time from which the period of limitation is to be reckoned. The 4th plaintiff does not come within this description, for at that time he was not in existence. He, therefore, is not entitled to the three years' extension. (Sir Lawrence Jenkins.) #### EXCLUSION.

--- What amounts to-Evidence of.

The fact that a joint family estate has been occupied for many years by some of the members of the family and their predecessors is insufficient to prove exclusion of the other members of the family without further evidence (124). (Lord Buckmaster.) HARDIT SINGH r. GURMUKH SINGH. (1918) 9 L. W. 123 - 64 P. R. 1918 = 28 C. L. J. 437 - 58 P. W. R. 1917 = 24 M. L. T. 389 = 20 Bom. L. R. 1064 = 47 I. C. 626 = (1919) M. W. N. 1.

The question whether a person has been excluded from joint family property within the meaning of Art. 127 of the Limitation Act must depend upon the facts of the particular case which is under consideration. An intention to exclude is an essential element and it is necessary for the court to be satisfied that there was an intention on the part of those in control and possession of the joint family property to exclude a member. The questions arising upon Art. 127 are: (1) whether the member in question was excluded from the joint family property; (2) if he was so excluded when did such exclusion take place; (3) when did the exclusion, if any, become known to him.

R, who with his brothers B and G, constituted a joint Hindu family, had a son, N, by his second wife. Within a year of his marriage with A's mother, and while she was living in the family dwelling house, R married another lady, being the third wife. N was born in June, 1886. Up to 1886 N's mother lived with her husband in his family dwelling-house. Owing to friction in K's, family, due to his third wife, A's mother and her two children were, soon after the birth of N, taken by his maternal uncle with K's consent to live with him (the maternal uncle) at his own village. In September, 1888, N's mother and her two children were, however, brought back by R, or by one of his brothers acting on his behalf, to R's family dwelling-house, and they lived there until K's death in 1893. They continued to live there until 1898, when N's mother and his elder brother died of the plague. A's maternal uncle went to A's village for the obsequies of A's mother, and, with the consent of B, N's paternal uncle, he took N, to his own home in another village. N was at that time 12 years old. Thereafter N lived with and was maintained by his maternal uncle, and assisted his uncle in his agriculture. After that date, A' never resided in the family dwelling-house and he received no maintenance or education from the members of the joint family. N was married in or about 1908. The marriage took place in his maternal uncle's village at the same time as the marriage of his uncle's brother. ingly his marriage expenses were practically No application was made by him or on his behalf to the members of his joint family for any assistance towards his marriage expenses, and they did not provide anything towards the same. About 2 years after his marriage N began to live separately and he then got some land, which he rented from the Government, at his maternal uncle's village.

In a suit for partition instituted by N on 21-7-1920, the High Court dismissed the suit, holding that N had been excluded from the joint family property from 1898, and that he must be taken to have been perfectly well aware of the fact in 1904, when he came of age. The ground of their decision was that the whole series of facts, beginning with 1898, when his mother died, showed that N's connection with the family had been severed and that he acquiesced in that severance.

Held, reversing the High Court that the evidence was not sufficient to justify the finding that A'was excluded from the joint family property in 1898, and that, even if the facts relied upon could be said to amount to exclusion, the defendants had failed to prove that A' was aware more than 12 years before the institution of the suit of any intention on the part of the members of the joint family to exclude him from the joint family property when he should choose to assert his rights.

The evidence goes to show that the departure of N from the family dwelling-house in 1898 with his maternal uncle was voluntary. He was in no sense turned out. He went with the consent of B. his paternal uncle. The reason for his departure is obvious: his father and mother were dead, he was only 12 years old, and his step-mother ruled that branch of the family, and having regard to the state of affairs under that rule and to what had previously occurred, it may well have been thought better for N that he should go with his maternal uncle rather than remain in the same house with his step-mother. The mere fact that during the time N was living with his maternal uncle the members of the joint family did not subscribe towards his maintenance, education or marriage expenses, does not, in their Lordships' opinion, having regard to the facts of this case, prove that those in control and possession of the joint family property intended to exclude him from his share of the joint family property. It is consistent with the evidence that the members of the joint family, who were in control and possession of the joint property, though willing to allow N to be maintained at the expense of his maternal uncle never did anything to indicate to N or any one else that they intended to exclude him from his share in the joint family property (Sir Lancelot Sanderson.) — Finding as to—Fact or Law-Concurrent findings —Privy Council's interference with.

The question of what constitutes exclusion may well, in many cases, be a question of law. But in this case the Board are clearly of opinion that the facts relied on to establish the exclusion are quite insufficient for the purpose and as the burden of proof on this issue lay in the first instance on the appellant, this disposes of the appeal. Their Lordships think that the whole of this case is really determined by the concurrent findings of fact of the Courts below. (Lord Buckmatter.) SHYAMANANDA DAS v. RAMKANTA DAS. (1917) 42 I. C. 258=(1917) M. W. N. 642=21 C. W. N. 1142

A Hindu died in 1882, leaving him surviving 3 sons. On his death, the eldest son, the other two being minors, applied under Oudh Land Revenue Act of 1876 for mutation of names in respect of the deceased's estate in his favour as the eldest son. On that application an order was made by the Deputy Commissioner that the eldest son be recorded as lambardar, and that so much of the order of the Assistant Commissioner as directed the registration of the names of the younger sons as co-sharers should be cancelled. The younger sons, however, remained in occupation of the estate jointly with their elder brother until 1911. Then they lived separately, receiving substantial sums from their elder brother for maintenance. The eldest brother died in 1916, and in 1917 the youngest brother sued for partition. The defendants, the sons of the eldest brother, pleaded, inter alia, impartibility of the estate by custom (a plea which was found against), and limitation on the ground that the plaintiff had been excluded from the family property for more than 12 years since 1882, when the mutation of names had been effected in favour of their (defendants') father.

Held, reversing the appellate Court and restoring the trial Judge, that the suit was not barred.

The judgment of the appellate Court is to a great degree based on the error that the proceedings for the mutation of names are judicial proceedings in which the title to and the proprietary rights in immovable property are determined. They are nothing of the kind the mutation proceedings afford clear evidence that the eldest brother took possession of the estate as property to which he was entitled to exclu-sive ownership, and not on behalf of the younger brothers. There can be no doubt he had sole physical possession in the sense that he was able to deat with the proceeds, and to exclude all others, and there can be no doubt that he showed a determination to exercise that physical power on his own behalf. He had therefore sole legal possession, but only in the sense that any person who on application for mutation of names is put upon the registry as sole occupier will have sole legal possession, whether he be the head of a joint Hindu family, or not head of any family, or an absolute owner. Those orders are not, however, evidence that the eldest brother was in possession as sole legal owner in a proprietary sense, to the exclusion of all claims of the other members of the family as co-owners or for maintenance of otherwise. The said orders did not effect and were not intended or designed to effect proprio vigore an exclusion of the other members from all interest in the property of the joint family of which they were members (227-8). In a suit brought by the plaintiff-appellant for the recovery of his share of alleged joint family property in the possession of his cousin, the defendant-respondent, the question was whether plaintiff had been excluded from the alleged joint family property. It was contended that there was some joint possession on behalf of the plaintiff, on the grounds, 1st, that he lived in the family house, though not in the same apartments with his cousin; 2ndly, that he obtained an allowance of some Rs. 90 either per mensem or per annum,-it did not appear which.

A mortgage bond, dated 21 6-1856 provided for payment of the principal with intarest in the month of Jeyt 1274 F. S. (June 1866) and contained a claue to this effect: " should the mowzahs mortgaged be sold in execution of decree or for arrears of revenue, the mortgagee shall in that case be at liberty, without waiting for the expiration of the term of payment. to institute a regular suit, and to sell the moveable and immoveable properties of me the declarant and my heirs, and thereby realise the amount in question.

The mortgaged property was as a matter of fact sold on 21-3-1865 in execution of a decree obtained upon another mortgage bond made by the mortgagor subsequently to the above bond, and subject to it.

In a suit instituted on 30-8-1871 to enforce the mortgage bond against the mortgagor and the purchasers at the auction sale on 21-3-1865 above-mentioned, it was contended that the cause of action arose on the date of that auction sale, and that the suit, having been instituted more than 6 years after the date thereof, was barred. A mortgage for a term of 12 years provided that the mortgagors should pay annually a sum of Rs. 500 on account of principal and interest, and that, if there was any default in the said payment, the mortgagee was entitled, without waiting for the expiry of the stipulated period, to see for the recovery of the entire amount due under the mortgage. The first default was committed in February 1894. The stipula-ted period of 12 years expired on 21-2-1905. I suit to en-force the mortgage was instituted on . 1 2-1917, the original plaint stating that the cause of action accrued on 21-2-1905. The plaint presented in that form was, in pursuance of Or. 7 R. 11 (d) of C. P. C. of 1908, rejected with the note that under the terms of the mortgage deed the cause of action for the suit accrued on 21-2-1894, when the first instalment was not paid, that the suit was beyond time with reference to that date, and the plaintiff had not shown in the plaint why the suit was not time barred. The plaintiff thereupon amended the plaint stating that the cause of action accrued on 21-2-1894, and that the suit was not time barred by reason of various payments made towards interest on the dates specified in the plaint as amended.

Held that, by reason of the said amendment, the plaintiff must be deemed to have abandoned his case that the cause of action for the suit accrued on 21-2-1905 and to have committed himself to the position that the cause of action accrued to him on 21-2-1894, and that his suit, in the absence of any payment or acknowledgment by the mortgagor was barred long before the date on which it was instituted, and that he could not thereafter accordingly revert to the case so abandoned by him (195-6). A mortgage for a term of 12 years provided that the mortgagors should pay annually a sum of Rs. 500 on account of principal and interest. The deed contained a further clause that if there was any default in payment of Rs. 500 per annum, as aforesaid, on the part of the mortgagors, the mortgagee was entitled, without waiting for the expiry of the stipulated period, to sue for the recovery of the entire amount due under the mortgage. The High Court of Allahabad held, following previous decisions of that Court, that under a clause in the above form a single default on the part of the mortgagors, without any act of election, cancellation or other form of response or acceptance on the part of the mortgagees, and even against their desire, operated co-instanti, to make the money secured by the mortgage "become due," so that all right of action in respect of the security was finally barred 12 years later.

-Suit to enforce, against mortgagor personally and against purchaser of mortgaged property in execution of another decree against him-Limitotion-Principal object of suit to obtain sale of land against auction-purchaser.

By a mortgage bond, dated 21-6-1856 the mortgagor undertook to liquidate the amount of principal and interest in the month of Jeyt 1274 F.S. (June 1866). the instrument which created an hypothecation of land was as follows:- "As security for the above sums of money I pledge and mortgage mowzahs....held and possessed by me. I and my heirs shall not, as long as the whole amount aforesaid remains unpaid, transfer them in any way." The bond was registered on 23-6-1856.

The suit out of which the appeal arose was instituted on 30.8-1871 by the heirs of the mortgagee. The defendants were the mortgagor and purchasers of the mortgaged property in execution of a decree obtained upon another mortgage bond made by the mortgagor subsequently to the suit bond, and subject to it. The plaint in the suit sought to charge the mortgagor personally, and it also claimed to recover the amount of the principal and interest by the sale of the mortgaged property.

Held, affirming the High Court, that the suit was in substance one for the recovery of immoveable property, or of an interest in immoveable property, and fell therefore within cl. 12 of S. 1 of the Limitation Act of 1859 (6)

Neither cl. (10) nor cl. (16) of S. 1 of the Act of 1859 is applicable to the suit. Its object is to obtain a sale of the land as against the auction-purchasers. It is, therefore, as against them a claim founded not upon the contract to pay the money, but upon the hypothecation of the land (5-6). JUNESWAR DASS D. MAHA-(Sir Montague E. Smith). (1875) 3 I. Second mortgage's suit to recover his mortgage amount from-Limitation-Starting point.

Property X was mortgaged by A, its owner, first to B, then to C, and again to B. B obtained a decree on his first mortgage, making C a party to the suit, and in execution thereof the property was sold. The balance of sale proceeds left after satisfying B's decree was deposited in Court. Then B sued upon his subsequent mortgage without making C a party, obtained a decree and in execution thereof withdrew the balance of sale proceeds in Court deposit in satisfaction of the decree without giving notice to C of the said withdrawal In a suit for sale on his mortgage instituted by C within 12 years from the time when the money sued for became due, C sought a decree against B for the amount withdrawn by him from Court in satisfaction of his second decree with interest on the said amount, held that the suit was, so far as it related to B, a suit to enforce payment of money charged upon immoveable property within the meaning of Art. 132 of the Limitation Act and was governed by the period of limitation provided for

Held that the balance of sale proceeds in Court deposit represented the security which C had under his mortgage Suit by successor to recover property sold.

This was a suit brought by the mutawalli of a mosque to recover possession of property, alleged to have been settled as a valid wakf, from the defendants, whose title arose under incumbrances created by his predecessors in that office. The High Court held that the claim was statutebarred, relying on Art. 134 of the Limitation Act of 1908.

Held that, in view of the decision in L.R. 48 I.A. 302, which held that Art. 134 does not apply to a wakf, the conclusion of the High Court was not sustainable. (Lerd Sumner). ABDUR RAHIM P. NARAYAN DAS AURORA. (1922) 50 I.A. 84 (87)=50 C. 329 (332)=

TRANSFER OF PROPERTY MORTGAGED.

Transfer by mortgagee after he ceased to be such by getting in equity of redemption if a.

The transfer of property mortgaged contemplated by Article 134 is admittedly something other than an express transfer of the original mortgage. The article contemplates a transfer by a mortgagee purporting to transfer a larger interest than that given by the mortgage or at any rate an interest unencumbered by a mortgage. The appellant sought to put a limited construction on the article by contending that it only applied where the transfer took place while the mortgagee was mortgagee, or at any rate transferred possession which he had obtained as mortgagee. It did not apply, they said, where the mortgagee had apparently ceased to be mortgagee by getting in the equity of redemption, and had obtained possession not under the mortgage but under the purchase of the equity of redemption. Their Lordships see no reason for accepting this view. It appears to them to be immaterial that the mortgagee should have thought he was absolute owner if in fact he was mortgagee; and immaterial whether he got possession before, under or after the mortgage if in fact be purported to transfer the property to the transferee (199). #### TRUSTEE.

 Hindu and Mahomedan pious institutions—Manager or superior of—Trustee if and when a,

From the above review of the general law relating to Hindu and Mahomedan pious institutions, it would format facie follow that an alienation by a manager or superior, by whatever name called, cannot be treated as the act of a 'trustee' to whom property has been "conveyed in trust" and who by virtue thereof has the capacity vested in him which is possessed by a "trustee" in the English law. Of coarse, a Hindu or a Mahomedan may "convey in trust" a specific property to a particular individual for a specific and definite purpose, and place himself expressly under the English law when the person to whom the legal ownership is transferred would become a trustee in the specific sense of the term. -Shebait or muttawalli if a.

Art. 134 of the Limitation Act of 1908 refers to cases of specific trust, and relates to property "conveyed in trust." Neither under the Hindu law nor in the Mahomedan system is any property "conveyed" to a shebait or a muttawalli, in the case of a dedication. Nor is any property vested in him; whatever property he holds for the idol or the institution he holds as manager with certain beneficial interests regulated by custom and usage. Under the Mahomedan law, the moment a wakf is created all rights of property pass out of the wakf, and vest in God Almighty. The curator, whether called, mutwalls or Sajjadanashin, or by any other name, is merely a manager. He is certainly not a "trustee" as understood in the English system (315). Of course, a Hindu or a Mahomedan may "convey in trust" a specific property to a particular individual for a specific and definite purpose, and place himself expressly under the English law when the person to whom the legal ownership is transferred would become a trustee in the specific sense of the term, But persons holding property generally for Hindu and Mahomedan religious purposes are not to be treated as "trustees." "Conveyed in trust "is hardly the right expression to apply to gifts of land or other property for the general purposes of a Hindu religious or pious institution. (Mr. Ameer Ali.) - Arts. 134, 140, and 148—Applicability—Mortgage by testator—Redemption of—Suit for, by remainderman under will of mortgagor—Limitation—Transfer by mortgagee of absolute interest during lifetime of life tenant—Plea under Art. 134 based on—Maintainability.

In 1863 S mortgaged the suit villages, amongst others, and died in 1864, leaving a will whereby in the events that happened he left successive life interests to his three sons with ultimate remainder to his daughter, the plaintiff. Each interest was, under the will, contingent on the holder of the prior estate dying without male issue; but the three sons who were successively life tenants did die without lawful issue. B, the eldest son, who became tenant for life on his father's death, however, assumed an absolute interest in the property, and, acting as absolute owner, he, in 1867, mortgaged the villages subject to the mortgage of 1863 to the mortgagee under that mortgage for a sum which was expressed to include the amount due on that mortgage. The name of the mortgagee was to be entered in the revenue papers as mortgagee and that of B as proprietor In 1892, the equity of redemption in the suit villages was sold in execution of a money decree against B and was purchased by the mortgagee himself, who therefore entered into postession of them on the footing of being absolute owner. In 1898, the mortgagee, purporting to be absolute owner, mortgaged with possession the suit villages to R. In 1903 R purchased the villages from the heirs of the mortgagee in satisfaction of all claims under the mortgage and himself sold them to the respondent in 1904.

B died in 1900 and was succeeded by his brother, who in 1900 seed the respondent to recover possession of, inter alia, the suit villages. In that suit it was decided by the Privy Council that, though the mortgagee did not acquire an absolute interest from B, he yet, notwithstanding the terms of the mortgage of 1867, must be held to be entitled to his rights under the mortgage of 1863. Those rights, it was held, passed to the subsequent purchasers, and therefore the plaintiff in that suit was not entitled to recover possession of the property except on condition that he redeemed the mortgage security. The suit was remitted for the condition to be performed, but in 1913 the plaintiff in that suit died and the suit abated. G, the third brother, who succeeded him. filed a suit for redemption against the respondent, but he died in 1919 pending the suit which accordingly abated Within 12 years of his death and within 60 years of the mortgage of 1863 the plaintiff instituted against the respondent the suit out of which the appeal arose for redemption of the mortgage of 1863,

Held that, as the transfer of 1898 which was ex concention ineffective to give the absolute title was made during the existence of the particular estate vested in B, the provisions of Art. 140 of the Limitation Act applied to the case, and the respondent was defeated in the enjoyment of the absolute title by the provisions of that article; that, in so far as the respondent relied upon the transfer to him of the mortgage interest of the mortgage in the original mortgage of 1863, Art. 134 afforded him no protection, because it was inapplicable to the case of a transferee of a mortgage by express transfer, and to that of a person who has taken a transfer only of a mortgage, but has taken it without his knowledge mistakingly supposing that he was getting something better in circumstances like those of the case before the Privy Council, where he could not maintain his superior title by reliance on any period of limitation; and that, as the suit had been brought within the statutory period of 60 years allowed by Art. 148, it was not barred.

If the transfer ultra the mortgage interest had taken place in the lifetime of S, the Settlor, so that time had begun to run in his lifetime, Art. 140 would not, by reason of S. 9 of the Limitation Act, have availed the plaintiff.

Semble:—If B had the absolute title to the equity of redemption at the time when the mortgagee purported to transfer the absolute title to R the case would have been brought within Art. 134. (Lord Atkin). SKINNER:

A trustee has no power to dispose of trust property by a permanent mukarrari lease, though he is at liberty to dispose of it during the period of his life and a grant made for a longer period is good, but good only to the extent of his own life interest. It follows, therefore, that possession during his life is not adverse, and that upon his death the succeeding trustee would be at liberty to institute proceedings to recover the estate, and the statute would only run against him as from the time when he assumed the office. Such an argument has no relation to a case where trust property has been acquired under an execution sale and possesion retained throughout. (Lord Buckmaster). SUBBAIYA PANDARAM 2. A was trustee of certain charities created by two deeds the first of which declared that the heirs of the settlor in the order of primogeniture should be trustees and conduct the said charities. In execution of a decree obtained against A for a private debt of his, charity properties were attached and sold. In the same year, the plaintiff, his son and then a minor, sued, inter alia, the execution purchaser, and obtained a decree on 31-12-1900 declaring that the properties covered by the two deeds, including those purchased by the execution purchaser, formed a trust estate for the purpose specified in the deeds. The plaintiff instituted another suit and obtained a decree therein, dated 21-7-1913 removing his father from the trusteeship, and thereupon the plaintiff himself succeeded as trustee. On 23-7-1913 the plaintiff insti tuted the suit out of which the appeal arose to recover the properties sold at the execution sale aforesaid from the representatives of the execution purchase. The said execution sale was confirmed on 11-8-1898, and delivery of possession was made to the execution purchaser and from that day until the institution of the suit he and his representatives in interest were in uninterrupted possession of the suit properties.

Held, that the suit was barred under Art. 134 or Art. 144 of the Limitation Act of 1908.

Applicability—Mortgage in English form—Foreclosure proceedings on—Peror purchaser of mortgaged property not made party to—Mortgage's mut for procession against.

A mortgage in the English form, dated 17-11-1865, provided for the payment of the debt on 17-2-1866, and gave to the mortgagor the right of possession until default in payment, and to the mortgagee the right of entry after default. The mortgagec took proceedings under Regulation XVII of 1806 for foreclosure of the mortgage, and, by virtue of such proceedings, he became absolute owner on or strictly before 31-3-1873. Portions of the mortgaged property had, however, been sold previously by the mortgagor, but those purchasers weren ot made parties to the foreclosure proceedings, and they therefore continued entitled to redeem the mortgage. Consequently, the appellant, who acquired the original mortgagee's interest in the mortgaged property in the year 1879. instituted, on 6.9-1882, the suit out of which the appeal arose against the mortgagor and the purchasers from him. praying for an order for payment of the morigage amount, and in default a declaration that the defendants would be unable to redeem the mortgaged properties, and for possession.

Held, affirming the High Court, that Art. 135 and not Art. 147, of the Limitation Act of 1877, applied to the case and that the suit was barred. (Lord Hobborne.) SRINATH DAS P. KHETTERMOHAN SINGH.

Matt - Mohant of - Postetsion of must property from lessee under lease for term by prior mohant - Non-payment of rent by lessee for over 12 years after expiration of term Plaintiff, the mobunt of a mutt, sued to recover possession of the suit land, alleging that the same belonged to a math of which the plaintiff was the mobunt, and that the defendants had no title to it. The suit was instituted in 1911. The defendants were persons who claimed through one R who held the suit land under a kabuliyat executed in 1862 in favour of the then mobunt of the suit math for a period of 18 years. No rent was ever paid since the expiration of the term of the said lease in 1880. A verbal lease or arrangement set up by the plaintiff as having been entered into between the uncle of the defendants and the predecessor of the plaintiff was found against.

Held that the High Court was right in holding that the suit was barred under Art. 139 of the Limitation Act of 1908. (Lord Shate.) MOHUNT BHUGWAN KAMANUJ DAS 2. RAMKRISHNA BOSE. (1919) 26 C. W. N. 722 =

- Will-Immreable property devised by-Devise's suit for possession of-Limitation-Starting point.

Under Art. 140 of the Limitation Act of 1877 a suit by a devisee for possession of immoveable property left by a will must be brought within 12 years from the time when his estate falls into possession. According to the Hindu law a devisee becomes entitled to the property bequeathed, immediately upon the death of the testator; and a suit by him for possession of the immoveable property bequeathed is, therefore, harred under Art. 140, unless brought within 12 years from the date of the testator's death (172). --- Death of Date of Onus of proof of, in suit by reversioner to recessor possession on her death.

The question was whether a suit brought the appellants, the reversionary heirs of a deceased Hindu, for the recovery of possession of his properties after the death of his widow was or was not barred by limitation. The settlement of that question depended upon the fixture of the date of the death of the widow of the last male owner. The appellant's case was that the widow died on a date four days within the lapse of 12 years prior to the institution of the suit, while the respondents maintained that that fact had not been established.

Held, affirming the High Court, that the onus of proving the averment rested upon the appellants, and that they had failed to establish that fact. (Lord Share.) Plaintiff and Watson & Co. were co-sharers of certain lands. The plaintiffs in the suit were descendants of one L, who held the land in suit as Man. That Man was resumed in 1837, and at that time the ancestors of the plaintiffs, who had the Mafi, were offered an engagement for the land revenue. They on 5-4-1838 declined to take the land and engage for payment of the revenue. In 1842 a settlement was made, and then an engagement was made with the defendants, called the lumbardars, or representatives of the villagers, for the whole of the village, including the suit land and making no distinction between the way in which that land and the other land, of which the villagers were undoubted proprietors, was to be held. That settlement was to last for 30 years, and would expire in 1872. On a revision of settlement in 1879, the plaintiffs applied for what they called a cancelment of the farm to the defendants, and to have possession of the land as their ancestral estate. The defendants refused to surrender the land, and consequently the plaintiffs were referred to the Civil Court, and then the suit out of which the appeal arose was brought. The question was whether the suit was barred by the law of limita-

Held that Art. 142 of the Limitation Act of 1877 was applicable to the case, that when there was a refusal on the part of the plaintiffs, or their anscestors, to make the engagement for the payment of the revenue and the Government made the engagement with the villagers-the defendants-there was a dispossession or a discontinuance of possession of the plaintiffs within the meaning of that article, and that the suit was barred by the law of limita-

There has been no possession of any description in the plaintiffs or their ancestors since the period of the engagement with the defendants; and whether any proprietary right may have existed is not the question. It is whether there has been a dispossession or discontinuance, which there clearly was. No doubt the proprietary right would continue to exist until by the operation of the law of limitation it had been extinguished; but upon the question whether the law of limitation applies, it appears to be clear that it comes within the terms of Art. 142 (150-1).

Submerged land-Reformation in situ-Original owner's suit for possession on ground of-Limitation.

A chur which was found to be a reformation in situ of plaintift's land was occupied for some years by Government. It was then claimed by defendants as their property and Government made over possession to them. The plaintiffs sued to recover possession within 12 years of 1892 down to which year beyond temporary utbandi cultivation there was nothing to show an exclusion of the plaintiffs by the revenue authorities. Whether the land cultivated was the same each year or not did not appear; at any rate, it was annually submerged, and there were no circumstances to link together various portions of ground, so as to make the possession of a part, as it emerged, amount to constructive possession of the whole.

Held that down to 1892 there was no dispossession of the plaintiffs within the meaning of Art. 142 of the Limitation Act.

An annual cultivation of such parts of the diluviated lands as emerged during part of the year was not a dispossession of the owner of the lands within the meaning of that article.

Quere whether in the circumstances of such a case con duct insufficient to evidence dispossession of the plaintiffs could be used to evidence adverse possession available to the defendants. (Lord Sumner.) KUMAR BASANTA ROY 2. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.

The suit out of which the appeal to the Privy Council arose was brought by the mutawali of a mosque to recover possession of property, alleged to have been settled as a valid wakf, from the defendants, whose title arose under incumbrances created by his predecessors in that office. The question was whether or not the claim was statute-barred.

— Minor—Separate estate of —Enjoyment of, as joint estate of minor and his cousin, for over 12 years—Effect of —No suit by minor within 3 years of his attaining majority.

A suit brought by the respondent in the year 1891 for the recovery of share of two villages as joint estate of himself and the appellant was resisted by the latter on the ground that the property was and continued to be the separate property of his father and after his death of himself. On the assumption most favourable to the appellant, the facts were that up to the year 1858 the property was treated as and was separate property of his father, the appellant being then a minor, that at least in that year the appellant was disposses-sed, or discontinued his possession of his separate property, in favour of the joint estate, and that the appellant attained his majority in the year 1873.

Held, that the case came within Art. 142; but that if that was not so, the possession of the joint family was at any rate adverse to appellant's separate estate from the year 1858, and the case came within Art. 144; that the appellant could not have brought an action after the expiration of three years after he attained his majority; and that by $5.28 of the Limitation Act his right to the property was extinguished at the determination of the period limited for bringing a suit for possession of it (87-8). Possession-Suit for-Decree prior against defendant declaring plaintiff's title to suit land-Suit filed within 12 years of-Not barred.

The suit, which was filed in June 1917, was for possession of a piece of land appertaining to mouza B, which was liable to diluvion. On 15-4 1908, the present plaintiff's father, claiming as patnidar under the owners of the said mouza, had instituted a suit in the same court against the present defendants, for possession and mesne profits, alleging that, when the lands of the mouza had reformed and had become fit for cultivation and he attempted to take possession, he was obstructed by the defendants, who had taken possession in execution of a decree obtained by them in a prior suit of 1897 which they had instituted against third parties. In the suit of 1908, the High Court found that the defendants had not been shown to have been in possession of the particular price of land, the subject-matter of the suit of 1917, and that consequently a decree for possession and mesne profits should not be passed against the defendants. The High Court, accordingly, in the suit of 1908, passed a decree merely declaring the

IMMOVEABLE PROPERTY.

The term " immoveable porperty" in S. 1, Cl. 12 of Act XIV of 1859 is not identical with "lands or houses." The word "immoveable" was used as something less technical than "real", and the term "immoveable property" comprehends certainly all that would be real property according to English law, and possibly more, In some foreign systems of law in which the technical division of property is into moveables and immoveables, as, e.g., the Civil Code of France, many things which the law of England would class as "incorporeal bereditaments" fall within the latter category (52). The rule laid down in 6 Bom. H. C. R. (A. C. J.) 137 for the interpretation of Act XIV of 1859, S. 1, Cl. 12, is shortly this, viz, that, inasmuch as the term "immoveable property" is not defined by the Act, it must, when the question concerns the rigths of Hindus, be taken to include whatever the Hindu law classes as immoveable, although not such in the ordinary acceptation of the word. To the application of this rule within proper limits, their Loraships see no objection. The question must, in every case, be whether the subject of the suit is in the nature of immove able property, or of an interest in immoveable property; and if its nature and quality can be only determined by Hirdu law and usage, the Hindu law may properly be invoked for that purpose (50-1) (Sir James 11. INAM VILLAGE GRANTED BY PEISHWA-RESEMPTION ILLEGAL OF, BY OFFICER OF PEISHWA.

Real owner's suit for recovery of-Limitation-Starting point.

The suit was brought in 1828 by the respondent to recover from the appellant, the possession of a village. The village had been granted in 1803, by the peishwa, in Enam to A', the uncle of the respondent, and had been enjoyed by A' till his death in 1814. Soon after A"s death it was illegally resumed by an officer of the Peishwa, the Mamlutdar of the tallooka of Ahmedahad within which the viliage was situated. By the treaty of Poona in 1817, the Mamlut of Ahmedabad devolved upon the Guicowar. By the treaty of Baroda in November 1817, the Guicowar assigned the Mamlut to the East India Co. All the right of the prishwa against the East India Co as Mamiatdar, or farmer of Ahmedabad, having ceased by his declaration of war, and consequent subjugation of his territories, and surrender of himself, the Government of the East India Co. took possesssion of the village and collected the revenues for its own use, from 1817, to the commencement of the suit. The question for decision was whether the suit for the recovery of the village was barred.

It was found that the Enam grant continued in force until the deposition of the Peishwa and that the village had not been assessed for the benefit of the state for the period of twelve years, Held, that the suit was not barred (50.1). MORTGAGE BY CONDITIONAL SALE-FORECLOSURE PROCEEDINGS ON.

-Prior purchaser of mortgaged property not impleaded in-Mortgagee's suit for possession against-Limitation -Provision in mortgage for entry on default.

Defendant was purchaser from the Assignee in insolvency of a person who had purchased the suit property from the mortgagor, A. The purchase was followed by registration and mutation of names in the Collector's Book, and possession.

At the time of the sale the property in question was subject to a first mortgage, made in the form of the English mortgage, with the usual proviso for redemption, and a proviso that the mortgagor should continue in possession until default, and on default an express right of entry was given to the Mortgagee.

After the sale under which the defendant claimed, the first mortgagee instituted a suit for foreclosure, which proceeded to a foreclosure nisi, which was subsequently made absolute.

The plaintiff, who was himself a secured mortgagee of the suit property, the mortgage being also in the English form with the same provisos for redemption and entry on default, however, procured that foreclosure to be opened, paid off the first mortgagee, took a transfer of his mortgage, and then proceeded himself to foreclose the mortgagor, and obtained his final decree for foreclosure. To those foreclosure proceedings the purchaser of the property in question was not made a party.

Having foreclosed his mortgage, the plaintiff commenced the suit out of which the appeal arose against the defendant for possession of the property. The suit was instituted more than 12 years after the original purchase from the mortgagor and more than 12 years after default within the meaning of the proviso in the mortgage conferring the right of entry on such default. The question was whether the suit was harred by limitation.

Held, affirming the High Court, that the suit was barred under S. I. cl. 12 of the Limitation Act of 1859 (149).

The defendant not being a party to the foreclosure procoedings, neither he not the property in question was affected by them. As against the defendant the plaintiff has acquired no right, except that which was conveyed to him by his securities. The right under the mortgage deed was to obtain possession of the land, and the cause of action accrued when default was made which was more than 12 years before suit (149). (Lord Justice James.) On 14-6-1875, R, the father of the respondent in the original appeal and appellant in the cross-appeal purchased a share of a mehal at a sale for arrears of Government revenue held under S. 13 of Act XI of 1859, and received a certificate of sale thereof from the Collector. On 25-2-1878, the appellant in the original appeal brought the suit out of which that appeal arose against R and others, claiming to have an incumbrance upon the estate by virtue of two mokurruri pattas executed by the heirs of the last of a series of benamidars. It appeared from the evidence that the last benamidar had actual ownership of one-fourth of the property comprised in the pattas.

Held that the incumbrance was good to the extent of such fourth, and that the claim was not harred by Art. 144 of the Limitation. Act of 1877 (166). (Sir Richard Couch.) IMAMBANDI BEGUM v. KUMLESWARI PERSHAD.

Property sold at Owner's suit for recovery of Limitation—Cause of action—Grant subsequent by Government to purchaser at increased revenue if affords a.

Talook H, belonging to the plaintiff's deceased father. was sold by the Government for arrears of revenue in 1854. and the 2nd defendant, the purchaser, was put into actual possession of 50 villages belonging to the talook in 1855, and he remained in possession up to the date of suit. The plaintiff instituted the suit out of which the appeal grose on 28-9-1868 for the recovery of the said villages. alleging that those villages, although in some sense belonging to the talook, ought not to have been sold by the Government inasmuch as they were not subject to revenue, but were mocassa villages, which had been alienated from the Zemindary, and paid a quit-rent only to the Zemindar. To get over the plea of limitation the plaintiff relied upon some proceedings of the Government of 1860, by which it was said that they made a new grant of those villages to the 2nd defendant at an increased revenue.

Held that the grant to the 2nd defendant, supposing one to have been made, would not give a new cause of action, and could not affect the time when the only cause of action arose to the plaintiff, and that the suit was barred.

The plaintiff is suing under the title he had in 1854 and 1855, and he has no other title, and he does not allege that he has had any possession or that the Government has given him possession since his first dispossession. -Limitation.

Suit by the appellant to establish his right to a toda girarhug upon the inam village of the respondent, and to recover arrears due in respect of that hug.

Held that the interest of the hugdar of a toda girai hug was "an interest in immoveable preperty" within the meaning of S. 1, cl. 12 of the Limitation Act of 1859, and that the suit, having been brought within 12 years after the date of the last payment, was not harred (53).

The liability to make the payment is not personal to the respondent, but is one which attaches to the inaudar into whosoever hands the village may pass; in other words, the huq is payable by the inaudar virtute tenney. The interest of the handar does possess the qualities both of immobility and of indefinite duration in a degree which, if the question depended upon English law, would entitle it to the character of a freehold interest in or issuing out of real property (53), (Sir James W. —Arts 144. 116.—Applicability—Compromise—Immoveable property assigned by—Suit to recover—Compromise not root of title but merely evidence of antecedent title acknowledged and defined by it.

The suit was to recover the share of immoveable property assigned to the plaintiff and her sister (in whose right also the plaintiff claimed) by a compromise agreement. The defendant claimed under the other party to the compromise, and was, and continued, in possession of the share sued for notwithstanding the compromise. The suit was instituted at the end of 9 years from the date of the deed of compromise.

The compromise was, on its true construction, based on the assumption that there was an antecedent title of some kind in the parties, and the agreement merely acknowledged and defined what that title was. The plaintiff's claim did not therefore rest on contract only, but upon a title to the land acknowledged and defined by the contract, which was part only of the evidence of the plaintiff to prove her title, and not all her case.

Held that cl. 12 of S. 1, and not clause 10 of S. 1 of the Limitation Act of 1859, applied to the case, and that the suit was not barred (166).

The suit is not founded on contract or for a breach of it, but it is a suit for the recovery of immoveable property "to which no other provision of the Act applies," and so within cl. 12 (106). (Sir Montague E. Smith.) RANI MEWA KUWAR. P. RANI HULAS KUWAR.

A usufructuary mortgagee was dispossessed of four of the 5 mouzahs mortgaged by the sons of the mortgagor. In a suit brought in consequence by the mortgagee for the restoration of possession, the then mortgagor set up the defence that the mortgage money had been fully satisfied by the usufruct of the property. The Coart, however, made a declaration which, perhaps, was unnecessary, that he was entitled to hold possession until the amount found due by the mortgagor was fully paid. -Limitation-Suspension of-Fusion of interests of mortgagor and mortgagee after accruing of right to

In a suit brought in 1907 for the redemption of a usefructuary mortgage made in 1842, it was contended that the suit was not barred under Art. 148 of the Limitation Act, 1877, inasmuch as, between the years 1883 and 1898, there was a junction of the mortgagor and mortgagee interests in one person and the said period should therefore be excluded from the computation of the sixty years period. Held overruling the contention, that under the mortgage bond the right to redeem accrued to the mortgagors the moment the mortgage was executed, and the sixty years' period must be computed from the date of the mortgage, that there was nothing in the Act of 1877 to justify the view that, once that period of limitation had begun to run, it could be suspended and that to hold that, by reason of the fusion of interests, the period of limitation was suspended, would the case being not one to which the proviso to S. 9 of the Act applied-be to decide contrary to the express enactment of that section that "when once time has begun to run, no subsequent disability or liability to sue stops it. Thereafter, and while the respondent was yet a minor, his elder brothers, on their own behalf and as guardian of the respondent, sold village B to the mortgagee (appellant) in 1889 in discharge of both the mortgages. -Right to, merely by reason of his making common came seith Cellecter.

A private owner, whose title to land has been extinguished by 12 years' adverse possession, cannot set up a sixty years' law of limitation merely by making common cause with a Collector. The true answer to such a contrivance is, the legal right of the Government is to its rent; the lands are owned by others; as between private owners contesting inter se the title to the lands, the law has established a limitation of 12 years; after that time it declares not simply that the remedy is barred, but that the title is extinct in favour of the possessor. The Government has no title to intervene in such contests, as its title to its rent in the nature of jumma is unaffected by transfer simply of proprietary right in the lands.

The cause of action of a private owner who has been dispossessed to sue for the recovery of possession cannot be kept alive longer than the period of limitalion of 12 years, by the expedient of inducing the Collector to make common cause with him, or by inducing the Collector to sue in his right (362-3.) ed defendant, J, E's brother. The decree did not make E personally liable, but declared that the decretal amount was to be realised by the sale of the property of J in E's hands. On the death of J, E sued J's widow for the recovery of possession of J's property which she had taken possession of. That suit was decreed in E's favour by the sub-judge. His decision was reversed by the High Court on appeal, but was restored on further appeal by the Privy Council, on 22-7-1914. J's widow remained throughout in possession of J's property, and E obtained possession of it only after the decision of the Privy Council, Though the sub-judge had decided in E's favour, execution of his decree was stayed by the High Court pending the disposal of the appeal to it.

Preliminary decree—Affirmance on appeal of.

If an appeal is preferred against the preliminary decree in a mortgage suit, the final decree is the decree of the appellate court of final jurisdiction, and, when that decree is passed, it is that decree and only that which can be made final in the cause between the parties. Hence the period of limitation for an application for the making of a final decree in such a case runs, not from the expiry of the time fixed by the original preliminary decree, but from the date when on appeal against that decree the appeal was dismissed. - Preliminary decree-Appeal from-Decree in, not extending time for payment-Expiry of period before date of.

Where there has been an appeal from a preliminary mortgage decree under O. 34, R. 4 (1) of C.P.C., and the appellate court has not extended the time for payment, the period of three years within which, under the Indian Limitation Act of 1908, Art. 181, an application for a final decree under O. 34, R. 5 (2) C.P.C., must be made runs from the date of the decree of the appellate court, not from the expiry of the time for payment fixed by the preliminary decree. This rule applies, notwithstanding that, before the date of the appellate decision, three years after the time fixed for redemption by the first court decree had expired, and therefore that decree was dead before the appellate court gave its decision.

The jurisdiction of the appellate court is not touched by the Limitation Act, and when an appellant appeals, unless there is some rule dismissing the appeal for want of time or an order is procured dismissing it, his appeal stands till it is heard. Therefore the appellate court has a right to determine the appeal, and it has jurisdiction to pass its decree.

EXECUTION APPLICATION.

Continuation of pending-New application-Test. On August 24, 1888, an application for execution of a decree upon a mortgage bond was made, and an order was made on December 18, 1888, that the execution should proceed; and other steps followed. On November 29, 1889, an order was made to the effect that, the property to be sold being ancestral, the case should be struck off the file, and the papers transferred to the Court of the Collector for the completien of the sale proceedings.

On December 23, 1889, there appeared another: "In this case the decree-holder has not up to this date deposited R I on account of the order for sale by auction, and the copy of the decree to be sent to the Collector's Court. Therefore it is ordered that in default of prosecution on the part of the decree-holder the record be not sent to the Collector's Court for taking the said proceedings,

During the interval, however, that is, on February 15, 1889, an appeal was preferred to the High Court against the original order of December 18, 1888, under which the execution proceeded. The High Court allowed that appeal, but the decision of the High Court was reversed by Her Majesty in Council, the judgment of the Board being delivered on November 24, 1894, and embodied in an Order in Council of December 12, 1894.

On November 23, 1897, an application was made which by its terms asked that the sums due by virtue of the decree be "realised by sale of the mortgaged property," that "the execution case instituted on the 24th August, 1888, which was sent to the Collector's Court on the 29th November, 1889 may be revived, and it may be sent to the Collector's Court, and by issue of a warrant of arrest."

Held, affirming the High Court, that the application of November 23, 1897, was in substance as well as in form an application to revive and carry through a pending execution, suspended by no act or default of the decree-holder, and not an application to initiate a new one, and that it was accordingly not barred by limitation.

It was contended for the appellant that the former execution proceedings were finally disposed of and came to an end by the orders of November 29 and December 29, 1889, or one of them, and that the present application could only be regarded as one for a fresh execution, and therefore was barred under Art. 179 of the Limitation Act of 1877. But the first of those orders was in aid of the execution. As to the second order, assuming it to have been perfectly regular, it was in no sense a final order. If the appeal to the High Court against those proceedings and the judgment of that Court, and the appeal to Her Majesty in Council rendered necessary by that judgment, had not intervened to interrupt the course of the execution, there was nothing in the terms of the order to preclude the decree-holder from coming again to the Court, satisfying the conditions indicated in the order, and obtaining the transmission of the case to the Collector's Court. Their Lordships are of opinion that the execution proceedings commenced by the petition of August 24, 1888 were never finally disposed of. (Six Arthur Wilson.) SHAIRH KAMAR-UD-DIN AHMAD P. #### MORTGAGE.

- foint mortgage debt—Suit for recovery of, against all mortgagors—Preliminary decret in, ex parte against on defendant, and on merits against others—Setting aside of ex parte decree against that defendant and fresh deese passed against him—Execution of decree in suit—Limitation as against all defendants—Starting point of.

In a suit for the recovery of a joint mortgage debt from all the mortgagors jointly, a preliminary decree was passed on 25-8-1900 against all the defendants, the judgment against S, one of them, going by default of appearance. That decree was made absolute on 21-12-1901. In the interval, however, S applied for a review of the judgment of 25-8-1900 on the ground that she had never been served with process. That application was allowed on appeal on 11-3-1902, the case was re-heard against S, and judgment was given against her by the first Court on 15-8-1902, and by the High Court on appeal on 16-11-1904. On 27-11-1905 a decree absolute was made against her by the trial Court.

Held that an application filed by the plaintiff on 21-12-1905 against all the defendants for execution by sale of the mortgaged property was not barred against any of the defendants.

The judgment of 25-8-1900 was treated by the Court and by the parties as a mere step in the granting of the relief for which the plaintiff was asking and to which, as it ultimately turned out, he was entitled, namely, a decree against all the defendants jointly. The decree of 16-11-1904 was the second step in granting to the plaintiff the relief to which he was entitled. It supplemented and completed the decree of 25-8-1900, and for the first time gave to the plaintiff that which would alone justify him in applying for the joint execution to which he was entitled. It is from the date of this last judgment (November 16, 1904), or rather from the date when it was made absolute (November 27, 1905) that the time under the Statute (Art. 179 of the Limitation Act of 1877; began to run. It was contended that where a decree nisi for sale is made in a mortgage suit the period of limitation mentioned in the Limitation Act of 1877 is in effect three years plus six months, the period given by the decree for redemption. That view is not correct. The sale is merely something to be done under the decree. #### PROPER COURT.

Decree transmitted for execution to another court and not re-transmitted—Application to original court for execution by sale of immoveable property within jurisdittion of Court of transfer.—If to proper Court.

A money decree of the District Court of V, dated 5—4—1904, was, on the application of the decree-holder, transmitted for execution, by order dated 30—9—1904, to the Court of the District Munsif of P. The copy of the decree sent to the Munsif's Court for execution and the certificate of non-satisfaction were not returned by the Munsif to the District Court of V till 3—8—1910.

After the transmission of the decree to the Munsif's Court of P, the decree-holder applied to the Munsif's court of P for the attachment of the judgment-debtor's immoveable property which was situate within the local limits of the jurisdiction of that court, and the property was attached in execution of the decree. But nothing further was done.

On 13-12-1907, the decree-holder applied to the District Court of V for an order for the sale of the property which had been attached by order of the Munsif's Court of P, on the erroneous assumption that the decree had been retransferred to the District Court of V. Nothing was done on that application.

On 27-4-1910 the decree-holder presented a fresh petition to the District Court of V for the execution of the decree by sale of the immoveable property which had been attached by the Court of the Munsif, alleging that the decree had been returned to the District Court.

Held, that the application of 27-4-1910 was not made to the proper Court, and that it was in any event barred under Art. 182 of the Limitation Act of 1908. The decree had by order of the District Court been sent on 30-9-1904 to the Court of the Munsif of P for execution by the latter Court. The copy of the decree with the non-satisfaction certificate was not returned to the District Court until 3-8-1910. Hence the application of 13-12-1907 for execution of the decree by sale of the immovable property of the judgment-debtors, which was within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Munsit's Court of P, must have been made to the Munsif's Court of P and not to the District Court of V. That application having been made to the latter Court was not made to the proper Court and cannot afford a fresh starting point of limitation. (Sir John Edge.) On 30-9-1916, the respondent, the wife of the appellant, obtained a decree by which certain properties, contained in a list attached to the decree were to be left in possession of the appellant, who was to pay to the respondent annually a sum of Rs. 2,000 in the month kason, or in default of payment of the same (Rs. 2.000 annually) the said property contained in the said list would be made over to the respondent.

Held, that the application was not barred either as to the payments for 1923 and 1924 or as to delivery of possession.

MORTGAGE SUIT.

Decree of High Court in-Order absolute in-Application fer-lamitation.

In a suit for sale upon a mortgage brought in the High Court of Calcutta, a decree was made on 16-12-1886 for payment of a certain sum in 6 months, with a provision that in default of payment the mortgagor should pay any deficiency arising on the sale. In 1903, the mortgagor (1st respondent before the Privy Council) sold his interest in one of the mortgaged properties to a person who re-rold it to the 2nd respondent. On an application filed by the mortgagee on 3-7-1909 for an order joining the second respondent as a party to the suit and for an order granting leave to sell the mortgaged property in pursuance of the decree of 16-12-1886, Held (affirming the judgment of the High Court) that the application was one "to enforce a judgment or decree" within the meaning of Art. 183 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act 1908, and was barred as it was not made within twelve years from the date fixed for payment, (Lord Show,) MUNNA LAL PARRUCK P. -Personal decree in-Application for-Limitation-Ascertainment of balance.

The right of a mortgagee to a personal decree accrues, within the meaning of Art. 183 of the Limitation Act of 1908 along with his other rights, when the final decree is made. If he wishes to exercise it in time, he must also take timely steps for those proceedings which are a necessary preliminary (134).

A mortgagee cannot, it is true, have a personal decree till the mortgaged properties have been exhausted by sale. But this does not mean that he can first wait till just short of twelve years before selling and then take another period just short of twelve years for a personal decree (133.4).

sion seems to have been, that the Order of Her Majesty in Council being an act done by virtue of Her prerogative, it was not competent to the Indian Legislature to limit the time within which that order could be enforced. Their Lordships are not prepared, without full argument and consideration, to accept this ruling as correct. Should the question ever be brought here, it will have to be considered whether the Order in Coen il does more than prescribe what shall be the final decree in the cause, leaving it to be executed by the ordinary process of the Courts in India. It may well thus finally ascertain and define the rights of the parties without relieving them from the obligation imposed upon them by the general law of enforcing those rights with due diligence-a matter with which the prerogative has no concern (492-3.) REVIVAL OF DECREE.

--- Transmission of decree to District Court for execution if a.

An application for transmission of a decree from the High Court to a District Court is not by itself a revival of the decree within the meaning of Art. 183 of the Limitation Act of 1908, inasmach as it is a mere ministerial act of an officer of the Court and not the judicial act of a Judge (134).

Held that, that view was not affected by the circumstance that the judgment debtor was served with notice of the application for transmission, that he appeared pursuant to the notice and raised objections to the order, and that thereupon a consent order was made which, however, had no more effect than that of putting the order for transmission in form, leaving all objections of substance to be raised in the District Coart (134-5.) -Sale of property subject of litigation in consideration of Validity-Consideration-False recital in deed as to-Effect.

The suit was to recover the estate of one Pirthipal, the last male owner of the estate, after the death of his daughter who had succeeded to the same as his heiress. It was originally brought by A, who had been held to be the heir of the nearest collateral of Pirthee living at the daughter's death, and by the respondent, who claimed to be entitled to one moiety of the estate under a porchase from A. Subsequently to the institution of the suit, however, A withdrew from the case, and his name was on his own application struck off the record. Then arose the question whether the respondent could sue alone. The defendant appellant, who was in possession admittedly without title, contested the right of the respondent to sue alone on the ground that the sale to him was void as being champertous and a "gambling in litigation" contrary to public policy.

In the sale-deed A stated his title by succession, the impossibility of recovering possession from the defendant-appellant without a suit, and his own inability to sue owing to want of money. 'So, therefore, "he went on to say, "he has sold half the estate to the Raja (respondent) for a lakh and a half of rupees. He acknowledges the receipt of one lakh". The balance of Rs. 50,000 was to remain on deposit with the respondent to be expended in prosecuting the proposed suit and in paying a monthly stipend of Rs. 50 to himself and Rs. 20 to a muktar. On the termination of the litigation he was to receive the balance. In the suit the respondent and he were to act and work jointly, and the respondent was given full power to conduct the litigation and manage the expenditure.

The statement in the sale deed to the effect that one lakh had been paid to A was not in accordance with the fact. Probably the statement was introduced by the draftsman under the notion that it might impart some additional solemnity to the instrument. Apart from that untrue recital in the sale deed, however, there was no flaw in the transaction. Without assistance A could not have prosecuted his claim. There was nothing extortionate or unreasonable in the terms of the bargin. There was no gambling in litigation. There was nothing contrary to public policy.

Held, affirming the Court below, that the transaction was a present transfer by A of one moiety of his interest in the estate, giving a good title to the respondent on which it was competent for him to sue (121). (Lord Macnaghten.) LAL ACHAL RAM v. RAJA KAZIM HUSAIN KHAN.

It is now seventy years since Lord Macaulay pointed out that the delay in Indian litigation constituted a reproach to our administration, and their Lordships feel with regret that this reproach has not been taken away. A period of 15 years is needlessly long for the determination of any suit, and more than that period has elapsed since the plaints in these proceedings were issued (370). (Lord Backmatter.) -Their Lordships must pause to comment upon the lamentable delay which has taken place. These suits were both started in 1895 in respect of claims which, if wellfounded, would have accrued in 1892. It is true that some of the delay is to be accounted for by the fact that when the cases first came defore the District Judge, he attempted to deal with them by a short cut, and that time was consumed in the appeal from these orders and the consequent remand. But he gave his second judgment in April, 1914, and it has taken till now to bring the matter before their Lordships. Some delays are to be accounted for by the fact that in the agnate's suit there were very many plaintiffs and that all of them except the one plaintiff were made defendants in the other suit; and that from time to time deaths occurred, and that new parties had to be added by way of revivor or supplement. But, even so, the delays are discreditable. (Lord Phillimore.) KEFSARA VENKATAPPAYYA NAYANI VENKATARANGA ROW. (1928) 56 I. A. 21=

It might be possibly an advantageous rule if, as Mr. Scott expresses in his judgment, that where a party "has resorted to forgery to establish his claim, he must take the consequences of his own act, and that the court is not at liberty to assume for him a position which he has himself rejected." But their Lordships are unable to arrive at that conclusion, and are apprehensive that if such was the practice adopted, some cases might occur in which the court could not determine the point in issue in favour of either party. We also find in a recent case this Committee gave effect to the defendant's title although a document by which she sought to strengthen it was found to be a forgery. (161-2) However much the want of trustworthiness in the evidence of cases from India is to be regretted, we cannot by reason of the proof that a document adduced by one party is forged, transfer the property in which he and those through whom he claims have been in possession at the date of the suit for 44 years, to another, who has not established any right to it himself (162-3). In 1895, the plaintiff, the mahant at a math, instituted a suit aginst the defendants or their predecessors in interest to recover possession of properties of the math alleged to have been improperly alienated by his predecessor, B. Plaintiff's case then was that B had made the math over to plaintiff in March, 1892, went on pilgrimage thereafter and never returned, and died at Hardwar on 27-4 1892. The evidence adduced by him in that suit was also to that effect. The then defendant's case was that B was seen alive in 1895, the date of the institution of that suit, and that the plaintiff had, therefore, no title to sue. The Courts in that suit disbelieved the plaintiff's evidence, accepted that of the then defendants, and dismissed that suit on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to establish the fact essential to the validity of his claim, viz., that B was dead when the suit was instituted.

In 1916 the plaintiff instituted the suit out of which the appeal arose against the defendants for the recovery of possession of the same properties on the same ground viral that they had been improperly alienated by B. In this suit also the evidence of the plaintiff himself and of that of his witnesses was to the effect that B had died in 1892, in which case the suit would be clearly barred by limitation. The question was whether, by reason of the defendant's attitude in the prior litigation, they had so compromised their position that they were in effect estopped from deriving benefit from the plaintiff's evidence of death and from insisting that on that evidence the suit should be held barred by limitation.

Held, that the defendants were not so estopped, that the plaintiff's evidence could not be ignored, and that, in view of that evidence, the suit was clearly barred by limitation (345). (Lord Blanesburgh.) LAL CHAND MARWARI RAMRUP GIR. (1925) 53 I. A. 24=5 P. 312=

It is the great misfortune of Hindoo litigants that their cases often fall, in the earlier stages of litigation, into the hands of incompetent advisers, who, by the mixture of falsehood with truth, or by the suppression or abandon-ment of part of a true case, from some mistaken views of policy or difficulty, create often impediments to its success from which the true story, if revealed, would have been free. If, for instance, it should seem expedient to exaggerate the illness, weakness, or incapacity of an alleged testator, and to tutor witnesses to such proof, it may be thought politic to drop that part of a case, which necessarily supposes during the same interval a disposing capacity in the testator; and in Indian cases it is scarcely safe or just to make against the suitor himself the ordinary presumptions from the conduct of a suit, which would be made in our own courts under the like circumstances (92-3). The Indian Courts will not sanction every description of maintenance. Probably the true principle is that administering, as they are bound to administer, justice according to the broad principles of equity and good conscience, those Courts will consider whether the transaction is merely the acquisition of an interest in the subject of litigation. Asset fide entered into, or whether it is an unfair or illegitimate transaction got up for the purpose merely of spoil, or of litigation, disturbing the peace of families, and carried on from a corrupt or other improper motive. Although the law of champerty is not a law applicable to the mofussil, the Courts would be exercising a very unsound discretion, and acting on a very erroneous principle, if they were to allow a stranger to interfere in family affairs, by an agreement between him and the real heirs that if he should establish their claim he should be entitled to a share of the estate. Nor, in holding that such an agreement could not be enforced. would the Courts be running counter to what was decided by this committee in 8 M. I. A, 170; for the judgment there assumes that if the agreement is something against good policy and justice, something tending to promote unnecessary litigation, something that in the legal sense is immoral, it cannot be supported (264-5). A certain estate in the Partabghar district was owned by two joint families, the respective heads of which were Binds Sewak and Rama Pershad. They had made certain alienations which their descendants wanted to set aside. Not having funds to carry on the litigation, these entered into agreements with one Mahabir Prasad which were to the effect, 272., that in the share of each of them, Mahabir Prasad will be a co-sharer of one-half share . . . . he will bear the entire expenses in connection with the suit. In case of success he will be entitled to proprietary possession of the share which may be decreed and thereafter, he might at hit pleasure keep his share joint or have it partitioned."

Suits were accordingly instituted, with Mahabir Prasad as co plaintiff. But, soon after, the principal plaintiffs in each suit compromised the claim and allowed the suits to be dismissed against them. The question was whether under those circumstances Mahabir Prasad could continue the suits in respect of the share conferred on him by the agreement.

On the death of a zemindar, respondent, his brother, was recognised by the widows of the deceased and by the Government as his heir. Two years afterwards, however, the windows changed their minds. widows placed themselves completely under the infinence of the plaintiff, and agreed to pay him on demand the moneys to be advanced by him with interest. They also agreed that in the event of their succeeding in their suit against the respondent they would pay him a lakh of rupees and a moiety of the surplus collections, mortgaging the estate to secure those payments; that they would to nothing in the suit, or otherwise, without his consent. Under that agreement a suit was instituted in the names of the widows for the recovery of the zemindary. The plaintiff was, however, the dominus litis. Under the agreement the wislows executed a bond for Rs. 20,000 purporting to be the amount of the plaintiff's advances up to that date.

Held that, in view of all the facts of the case, it was extremely doubtful whether the plaintiff could have recovered on the agreement if the question had arisen between the widows and the plaintiff after he had got the estate for them; whether, upon the principles laid down by Peacock, C.J., and cited by Mr. Justice Kemp in 13 W. R. 426, the courts might not have refused to enforce such an agreement

The plaintiff was a person who had got up, or at all events intervened, in a suit with which he had no necessary concern; he had made himself dominus litis in that suit, and had acquired over the plaintiffs in it the power of preventing them from doing what they felt to be right and just; and from interested and corrupt motives was exercising that power. The respondent must be taken to have been the legitimate heir; and even if the wishows had fome fide entered into the litigation to dispute that legitimacy, it is perfectly clear that very soon after they had come to a better mind and had satisfied themselves that the right thing to do was to admit the legitimacy of the respondent (265.6). The suit was to enforce against the defendants, an agreement deted 3-11-1882 executed by the defendants and one H, not a party to the suit, in favour of the plaintiff. The defendants and // were some of the claimants to certain property, to which rival claims had been set up by others. The agreement in question provided that, in consideration of the plaintiff having taken upon himself the liability to pay all expenses of the prosecution of the suit which had been instituted by the defendants and # to get possession of the said property, they agreed with him that as soon as they were put in possession they would sell to him a certain share of the property, in lieu of and in consideration of the expenses to be incurred by the plaintiff in the prosecution of the case. Alleging performance of his part of the agreement, the plaintiff sued to have a sale-deed executed and for delivery of possession of defendants' share of the property.

Held, on the evidence affirming the courts below, that the agreement was unfair and was unconscionable, and that it would be against public policy to enforce it. The plaintiff in suit was a money-lender and was dealing with illiterate persons; he must have represented to them the likelihood and the necessity of extensive litigation-a representation unwarranted by the facts; further, the fee paid to the vakil was most excessive, and disproportionate to any work

No evidence was given that the assertion made in the agreement of 3 -- 11-1882, to the effect that to recover possession for the defendants would require large sums of money, was true, or that the plaintiff had any ground for

Held, dissenting from the High Court, that the language of cl. 12 of the agreement pointed rather to existing things than to non-existing things, and the agreement embodied in it was entirely different in its nature and character from an agreement assigning for a certain sum what, for instance, some relative might leave a contracting party, but who might never leave him anything whatever (18).

The respondent instituted a suit to recover possession of an impartible estate from the widow of the last male holder, claiming to be entitled to succeed to the same in preference to her. That suit was dismissed by the first Court, and the respondent's appeal to the High Court was also dismissed.

The respondent desired to appeal to the Privy Council, but had not a pice with him. The appellants consented to help him in meeting the costs of the Privy Council; including the security, provided he would, in lieu thereof, make them the proprietor of an eighth share of the property involved in the case with certain small exceptions. The respondent accepted the proposal, and executed a deed of sale in their favour, thereby selling to them an eighth share in the estate and of outstanding debts due to the estate, amounting to Rs. 64,000 and odd. It was stated that the consideration for the sale was Rs 12,500, the estimated costs of the Privy Council Appeal, convisting of Rs. 4,000 for the security of the Privy Council costs, and Rs. 8,500 for the translation of papers, the pleader's fee, and other expenses of every sort in the said department.

The appellants deposited these urity and the translation fees, and paid the other expenses of the Privy Council appeal. The appeal to the Privy Council was successful, and in execution of the decree therein the respondent obtained possession of the estate. He, however, refused to give to the appellants any part of the eighth share, whereupon they instituted the suit of which the appeal arose to recover it.

The High Court on appeal found that the respondent could not have filed or prosecuted the appeal to the Privy Council without pecuniary aid from third parties; that the plaintiffs believed the respondent's claim to be well founded and undertook to help on the conditions of the sale-deed; that they did not press him to accept the terms contained in the sale deed. In short, the High Court found that the plaintiffs were not professional money-lenders who had taken advantage of the position of the respondent, and had not volunteered their assistance to promote litigation. The High Court, however, felt constrained to find that the reward stipulated for was excessive and unconscionable, and, on that ground, they awarded to the plaintiffs the amount spent by them for the purposes of the Privy Council appeal with interest, instead of decreeing to them the eighth share of the estate.

was advanced to the appellant. In a suit brought by the representatives of A', after the termination of the litigation relating to the title to the zemindary and the establishment of appellant's title thereto, for recovery of possession of the share sold, the Sudder Court decreed possession to the plaintiffs, observing that the appellant had the power to sue for the recovery of the balance of the purchase-money.

Held that that decree was erroneous and that the suit

The price was presumably fixed upon a calculation of the risk undertaken by the purchaser, at a sum far below the real value of the thing sold. But if the purchaser under such a contract has retained part of the price for several years and until the risk has been determined by the happening of the contingency, he has pro tanto diminished the risk which he contracted to bear; and the vender has pro tanto lost that for which he stipulated—the present use and enjoyment of the money. - Commission for Farlure of party to make use of-Application by him for further time or for second local incontigution-Grant of Conditions.

In a suit to recover some land there was a dispute as to boundaries. A local investigation was directed to ascertain the boundaries. The Ameen appointed to conduct the investigation went to the spot. The plaintiff either failed to appear before him altogether, or if the persons who, after some delay, did appear, were his agents, they suggested that the boundaries were erroneously stated in the plaint. The result was that no report concerning the boundaries was made to the Court, and the parties again appeared before it. On the second appearance, the plaintiff did not appear to have taken any objection as to the proceedings of the Ameen. and the court upon that ground, and also upon the ground of his having omitted to give formal proof of his deed of purchase, dismissed the suit. He then appealed to the High Court; and his complaint there was not so much that his suit had been dismissed, because he had failed to prove his case, as that the lower Court had not given him further time or directed a second local investigation. The High Court, dealing with that as a pure question of practice, said that be had not given any sufficient excuse for his former laches. and on that ground dismissed the appeal.

Commissioner for making-Report of Hearing before Court on-Evidence additional-Tender of-Right of-Admissibility of such evidence-Conditions.

The sections of the Code of Civil Procedure which relate to local investigations do not contemplate the tender of further evidence after an Amin's report except the examination of the Amin himself, but they do not forbid it. They are consistent with either course, and the point whether such further evidence can be tendered must be decided on general principles according to the facts of each case (123).

In every trial there must come a time when it is proper that the evidence should be closed. After that time new evidence should not be given as a matter of course or without the assent of the court. As regards local inquiries, it may in many cases be clearly proper and convenient to take evidence in court after taking it in the locality. In others it may be equally clear that the locality is the proper place and the time of inquiry the proper time for bringing the proposed evidence.

In a case in which the most obvious time for closing evidence on an inquiry into mesne profits was the presentation of the Amin's report, the judgment-debtor not only neglected to produce his evidence before the Amin but disregarded the repeated demands of the latter for his evidence, and did not, either in his written objections to the report or in his grounds of appeal to the High Court, or even before the Privy Courtil, state the nature of the fresh evidence to be adduced and the reason for his being allowed to adduce such evidence at the heating of objections to the report before the Subordinate Judge, keld that the Subordinate Judge acted rightly in declining to allow the judgment-debtor an opportunity to adduce such additional evidence at that stage (123.4).

The judgment of the High Court cannot be supported unless every party to a local investigation has an absolute right to adduce evidence before the court after a commissioner's report; but no such absolute right exists (123-4). civil suit-No res judicata.

In a civil suit between the parties the question was whether the plaintiff's wife was insane at the time of her mother's death, or became insane only after the death of her mother. Held, that the report of a Munsif made on an inquiry held in a proceeding between the parties under Act XXXV of 1858 to the effect that the plaintiff's wife became a lunatic only after the death of her mother had not the effect of res judicata between the parties (526).

There was no adjudication by any competent tribunal upon the point in issue in this suit. The Munsif had no jurisdiction to decide it (526), (Sir James Colvile), BABOO BODHNARAIN SINGH & BAROO OMRAO SINGH,

-S. 9-Court of Wards in Oudh-Lunatic-Propristor adjudged by Civil Court to be a-Management of estate of-Power to assume-Order of Civil Court appointing Court of Wards Manager-Necessity.

The Talookdar who owned the property in question became a lunatic, and an application was duly made for an in quiry into the state of his health under S, 3 of Act XXXV of 1858. The application was made by the officer of the district where the talook in question was situated, and the Civil Court to which the application was made having caused notice to be given, did enter into an inquiry, and the result was that the talookdar was adjudged to be a lunatic, Held that thereupon the talukdar was rendered a disqualified proprietor within the meaning of S. 9 of the said Act, with the result that the Court of Wards was authorised to take charge of his estate without a further order of the Civil Court appointing the Court of Wards to be manager.

It seems to have been rather hastily concluded by the Judge below that the Court of Wards being authorised by the Legislature "to take charge of the same," required some further order from the Civil Court which adjudged the talookdar to be a lunatic to justify them in acting. Lordships think there is no ground for saying that, though S. 9 of the Act goes on to provide:-"In all other cases, except as otherwise hereinafter provided, the Civil Court shall appoint a manager of the estate" (45). entered into possession of the estate and the management of it; and during the course of the management a lease for 25 years was granted with various terms and provisions in it. It was contended that, as the lease was for a period exceeding five years, it was altra vires of the manager under S. 14 of Act XXXV of 1858.

Held that whatever might be the importance of the objection if the lease had been granted by one acting only under the authority of an appointment as manager by the Civil Court it did not apply to a lease granted by the Court of Wards (46).

Their Lordships suppose that the object of the order appointing as the manager of the property the same person who acted as the manager under the Court of Wards probably was that the court thought ex majore cantela "if there is any ambiguity about it we will take care that the Court of Wards has double power, and the manager shall act both under this court and the Court of Wards." It may not have been judicious, but that is the utmost object the Court would have bad, and if it was wrong it will not be a bit the worse (46). (Lord Blackhurn.) RAE SARABJIT SINGH :. CHAPMAN.

APPLICABILITY OF.

-liaradars or Middlemen.

The object of the Estates Land Act was to improve the condition and confer new rights and privileges especially upon the occupying cultivators of syoti lands. It would be quite opposed to its policy to confer on middlemen who sublet to occupying and cultivating tenants, rights and privileges at all resembling those conferred on occupying cultivators. and, indeed, would result in deprixing the latter class of the benefits intended to be conferred upon them. It could hardly be suggested that it was the object of the statute to bring about such a result as this, that the middleman could compel his landlord to grant him a patta at a rent to be fixed by a court, and the middleman's occupying and cultivating sub-tenants should in their turn be able to compel their immediate landlord, the middleman, to grant to them pattas of their holdings at rents to be similarly fixed, and this, though the middleman was an absentee who never even visited his estate (393). -Effect of-Old customary law-Recagnition of New rights created by At.

In declaring the rights of the occupancy ryots and emphasising the distinction between the landlord's "private lands" and "the ryoti" lands, the Madras Esta'es Land Act of 1908 affirmed the old customary law that had always been recognised by the British administration. Apart from rules relating to procedure and the jurisdiction of the Revenue Courts, it created one new right in order to settle the constant disputes between the landlords and tenants which had been going on for nearly a century; it gave occupancy right to all ryots in occupation of lands within an "estate" at the time of the passing of the Act. It also gave some security MADBAS ACTS-(Contd.)

One important feature of the Madras Estates Land Actis worthy of note; it throws into relief the component parts which, from immemorial times, go to constitute a village; first, the lands in the direct cultivation of the proprietor (called by various names); second, lands occupied by tenants or ryots; and third, old waste lands over which by custom the landlord possessed certain specific rights now crystallised in the statute (298). -S. 3-Settled estate-Acquisition of part of, under Land Acquisition Act-Government rycli patta land awarded as compensation for-If part of settled estate.

Parts of a settled-estate were taken by the Government under the Land Acquisition Act. The value of the lands taken was investigated; it was brought out that compensation would be fairly settled by a remission of Rs. 777 out of a total peishkush of Rs. 35,588, payable for the said estate. The estate holder then presented a petition to the Government praying that instead of the peishkush being tro tanto remitted, he might be given some Government lands in another district of which lands he had already acquired the ryoti rights. Accordingly no remission was made of the peishkush, which continued to be exacted as formerly, but by order of the Collector the new lands were transferred to the estate holder, and were entered in the register as Zemindari lands instead of Government lands as formerly.

When in the hands of the Government they were not part of a permanently or temporarily settled estate. The effect of the transaction detailed above was not to make the lands an estate settled at the peishkush of Rs. 777. A settlement should be effected formally, and there should be some recorded evidence of it. There is admittedly no sanad dealing with the lands, in terms of the articles of the Regulations. -S. 6 (1)- Applicability to lease created before Ad-Proof of -Onne on lessee or lessor.

Where leesees under a lease granted before the Estates LandAct allege that by the provisions of certain clauses of the Madras Estates Land Act, their contract of tenancy is entirely superseded; that they are relieved from the obligations imposed on them by many of the covenants of their lease; that their tenure is charged, their occauancy continued, and their rent made subject to revision, the burden rests upon them of clearly establishing that those clauses apply to their case. The obligation of proving the negative proposition. that those clauses do not apply to their case, does not rest upon the lessor (391). (Lord Athinson.) SURISETTI BUT-CHAYYA v. -Rysts within meaning of -Middlemen or - Test. The appellants were lessees of certain lanka lands in an estate under leases granted to them, before the Madras Estates Land Act of 1908 came into operation by virtue of their having been the highest bidders at an auction held in respect of the said lands. The practice in the estate with reference to the said lands was that when a lease was about to expire, or had but recently expired, an auction was held and a new lease granted to the highest bidder, whether he was the old lessee or not, there being thus no continuity of occupation, and the outgoing lessee having no privilege or advantage. The lease in favour of the appellants contemplated the cultivation of the land and the raising of crops upon it by ryots, and contained no clause prohibiting subletting. It was also found that the appellants dealt with the lands demised as middlemen, sub-letting them to tenants who held them subject to a rent payable to their immediate landlords, occupied them and cultivated them.

Held, that the appellants had not acquired a permanent right of occupancy under, and were not ryots within the

-S. 6 (1), Expl. -Ryeti land not being old waste-Tenant in wrongful possession of, under term-expired muchiliks-Occupancy right of.

Ryoti lands, not being old waste, within the appellant's Zemindary, had been held by the respondents for the purpose of agriculture under a muchilika, dated 28-7-1907, by which they agreed to hold the lands as appellant's tenants until 30.4-1908, the lands being described as "your Divanam Kambatam (private) lands," By clause 8 of the muchilika the respondents undertook to relinquish possession on 30-4-1908. They, however, failed to do so, and continued in possession of the lands after 30-4-1908, not only without the consent of the appellant, but contrary to his wishes and expressed intentions, and contrary to the terms of CL 8 of the muchilika. In a suit in ejectment brought by the appellant, held, affirming the High Court, that, even if the respondents had not any permanent right of occupancy in the suit lands before the commencement of the Madras Estates Land Act, they obtained a permanent right of occupancy in the holding by the operation of S. 6, sub-S. 1, as amended by S. 3 of Madras Act IV of 1909.

Their Lordships overruled, as unsound and untenable, the contention that the explanation to S. 6, sab-S. 1 of Madras Act I of 1908 did not apply to a person whose continued possession of ryoti land was that of a trespasser, and that it applied only when the person continuing in possession did so with the consent of the landholder. AFFORESTATION PROCEEDINGS UNDER-OBJECTORS TO.

Adverse possession-Claim of title by-Onni of proof of-Substituting title in Crown-Meaning of.

The respondents objected before the Forest Settlement Officer to the afforestation of certain lanka lands alleging title by adverse possession against the Crown for over the statutory period. The Courts below found that the respondents had proved adverse possession for only 20 years and that the title was originally in the Crown. The High Court held that, though the title was originally in the Crown, still, as the possession of the claimants for 20 years prior to the notification was found, it rested upon the Crown to prove that it had a subsisting title by showing that the possession of the claimants commenced or became adverse within the period of limitation, i.e., within 60 years before the notification.

Held, that the view of the High Court was wrong (204). The duty rested upon the claimants to establish affirmatively their and their predecessors' possession for 60 years. With reference to the "subsisting title," nothing further is needed than the acknowledgment of the undisputed fact that the suit lands belonged to the Crown. That fact is fundamental; until adverse possession against the Crown is complete, that is to say, is for the period of 60 years, that fundamental fact remains, and that fact forms " subsisting title." It is no part of the obligation of the Crown to fortify its own fundamental right by any inquiry into possession or the acceptance of any onus on that subject (206).

Objectors to afforestation preferring claims to lands sought to be constituted into a reserved forest under the Madras Forest Act, 1882, are in law in the same position as persons bringing a suit in an ordinary Court of Justice for a declaration of right. To such a situation in the one case, as in the other, Art. 144 of the Limitation Act of 1877 applies, the period of twelve years thereunder being, however, extended to a period of 60 year by Art. 149. In an ordinary suit for a declaration it cannot be doubted that the onus of establishing possession for the requisite period would rest upon the plaintiff. The situation of a claimant under afforestation proceedings is the same on this point (205). (Lord Shate.) SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA D. It is by no means easy to say what is meant by river or stream "belonging to the Government." The same expresion in an Act of the United Kingdom would probably connote a Government ownership of the bed or the banks of the river, but it is quite possible that the law of the Madras Presidency recognises some proprietary right on the part of Government in the water flowing in rivers and streams-The law of Madras Presidency as to rivers and streams certainly differs in some material respects from English law. Further, Madras Act III of 1905 appears to enact that (inter alia) all standing and flowing water, not the property of private individuals, is the property of Government. (Let Parker.) -Engagement-What amounts to-Estate subject to-Forfeiture to Crown of - Effect.

With acquisition by forfeiture the Crown becomes bound to take the forfeited estate tantum-et-tale as it stood in the subject who had rebelled, that is to say, to respect the rights and in particular the easements enjoyed by others. Otherwise the scope of the forfeiture would be extended; protante it would fall upon innocent and loyal subjects.

In 1814 a Zemindar who before the permanent settlement had constructed an artificial channel through the estate held at the time of the suit by the respondent admitted the right of the then holder thereof to take water from the channel for the irrigation of a village, and from that date until 1907 the respondent's predecessors and the respondent exercised that right without any claim to payment. In 1833 the estate of the Zemindar who had constructed the channel was forfeited to the Crown. In 1907 the Government imposed upon the respondent in respect of the village an irrigation cess under the Madras Irrigation Cess Act (VII of 1865) as amended by Madras Act V of 1900. In a suit brought by the respondent for the refund of the a nount levied upon him, and paid under protest, and for a declaration that he was entitled to use the water for irrigation in the village free of the cess, held that the re-pondent's prede:essors had with the owners of the forfeited zemindary a good "engagement" within the meaning of the proviso to Madras Act VII of 1865 as amended, that in taking the servient estate, that engagement accompanied the transaction, and was thereafter with the Crown; and that the respondent was consequently not liable to pay the cess. -Free of separate charge-Mouning of-Person relying upon Proviso-Proof required of.

There is difficulty in arriving at the meaning of the expression "free of separate charge" in proviso 1 to S. 1 of the Act. A provision that the person relying on the proviso must prove that he is already being charged for the supply would be intelligible, for in that case by the imposition of a cess, he would be charged twice for the same thing. But this is not what he has to prove. Indeed, he has to prove the contrary. He must prove either that he is not already charged for the supply, or that the charge, if any, is not a separate charge. (Lord Parker.) KANDUKURI BALA-SURYA RAD & SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.

Object of.

The real object of the provision may be found in the following considerations. The cess under the Act is leviable on the land which is irrigated. It is therefore in the nature of a land tax, and by S. 2 is recoverable in the same manner as arrears of land revenue. Now the permanent land settlement in the Madras Presidency (as in the Presidency of Bengal) proceeded on the footing that, whatever may have been the interest of the zemindars and other land-holders prior to the British occupation, the Government would grant to them and their heirs " a permanent property in their land for all time to come, and would fix for ever a moderate assessment of public revenue on such lands the amount of which should never be liable to be increased under any circumstances." The Government, therefore came under an obligation not to raise the jumma, or, as it is sometimes called, the peishcush, fixed at the permanent settlement in respect of the lands then granted. Under these circumstances the Government could not impose a cess for the use of water the right to use which was appurtenant to the land in respect of which the jumna was payable without in fact, if not in name, increasing the amount of such jumma, and thus committing a breach of the obligation undertaken at the time of the permanent settlement. If the right to use the water was paid for separately the case would be different. The existence of a separate charge would show that no payment for the use of the water was included in the jumma, and the imposition of a water cess though it might increase the separate charge would not increase the jumma. Its imposition would not be a breach of the Government's obligation. The object of the proviso was to safeguard the obligation not to increase the jumma. KANDUKURI BALASURYA RAO P. (Land Parker.) #### -S. 1. Proviso (2)-Object of.

The incidents of Kyotwari tenure are governed by custom, and in lude a right to receive from the owner of the soil (whether the Government or a private individual) a supply of water sufficient for the irrigation of the mamual wet lands comprised in each holding. The owner of the soil is, on his part, entitled to his customary share in the actual produce. I, has, however, long been the practice on Government estates to make periodical settlements with the Ryots whereby the Government's sleare in the produce is commuted for a fixed annual payment, in assessing which the wet lands are separately classified. The annual payment is incapable of increase during the period for which the settlement is made. It is paid (inter alia) for the Ryot's right to water for irrigating his mamul wei lands, and would be increased if a new cess were imposed for this supply. The second proviso seems to be intended to provide against this result. (Lord Parker.) KANDUKURI BALA-SURVA RAO : SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.

——Ss. 1 and 2—Engagement with Government—Zemindar's or inamidar's rights of user under—Extent of— Sanad—Construction—River or stream belonging to Government—Free of separate charge—Meaning of.

At the permanent settlement, the Government settled in four zemindaris lands contiguous to a river, together with four artificial irrigation channels and sluices connecting them with the river. The sunnads did not refer to the channels or sluices. The appellants were the present holders of one of the four zemindaris, the sluices of one only of the channels being upon their lands. The other three zemindaris has been purchased by the Government. The appellants used for irrigation water derived from the river through all four channels. The Government claimed to be entitled to key cess under the Irrigation Cess Act upon the appellant's lands for the irrigation so far as it included crops not customary at the time of the permanent settlement:—

Held, assuming that the river belonged to the Government, (1) that the settlement was an engagement with the Government within the meaning of proviso I to S. I of the Act; (2) that under the sanads the zemindar in whose estate the sluices of each of the channels were situated acquired the right to take from the river for irrigation an amount of water limited by the then size of the channels and nature of the sluices, but not limited by the irrigation then customary; (3) that after the water had passed into the channels the Government had no rights in respect of it, save as owners of the three zemindaris; (4) that the rights of the owners inter se in the water flowing in the channels were analogous to those of riparian owners in a natural stream, and (5) that, there being no evidence that more water was being taken from the river than was justified by the sanads, the appellants were not liable to pay cess.

Held, on the assumption that the river did not belong to the Government, that the right of taking water from it into each of the four channels could not depend upon any easement created by virtue of the permanent settlement, that it would depend in part upon the natural rights of riparian owners and in part on prescriptive rights existing at the date of, and passing under the sanads, or acquired since the sanads were granted; that in the case of those prescriptive rights, it would be the lands of the lower riparian owners and not the river itself, which would constitute the servient tenement and the Government would have even less interest in the amount of water taken into the channels, than if the river belonged to it and constituted the servient tenement and the rights inter te of the grantees of the four zemindaris being, however, for all practical purposes, the same; and that the rights of the appellants under the sanad could not in any case be affected by the subsequent purchase by the Government of the three other zemindaris. S. 16—Lands claimed by Government within mening of—Kyot.cari tenure lands—Submergence of, and relinquishment by ryets therenpon—Reformation in situ-Third party taking possession of them on—Governments claim against—Nature of.

Lands held by ryots under ryotwari tenure were submerged, and, on their submergence they were relinquished by those ryots. They were again re-formed in situ subsequently, and were taken possession of by the appellant, the holder of a neighbouring estate, or his tenants. The Government, however, claimed the lands as Government property, and proceeded against the appellant under the Land Encroachment Act III of 1905. The appellant contended that, as the lands had been throughout occupied by himself of his tenants, they had never been reduced into possession by the Government, that they were lands "claimed by Government" within the meaning of S. 16 of that Act, and that they were therefore exempted from the operation of that Act.

Held that the lands were not " claimed by Government" within the meaning of S. 16 of that Act (73).

Before submersion these lands were the property of the Government, subject only to the rights of the ryotwari tenures which they had created. The moment these rights were relinquished by the ryots the Government were free to deal with them as they pleased. The effect of the relinquish-

SEPARATE REGISTRATION AND SUB-ASSESSMENT --COLLECTOR'S ORDER FOR- JUDICIAL OR FISCAL. -Cancellation by Government-Legality of.

Being of opinion that the Collector's action in separately registering and assessing a portion of a permanently settled estate, under Madras Act I of 1876, was not judicial but purely fiscal, and that his proceedings were those of a Revenue Official and were therefore subject to the control of the Board and Government under Regulation II of 1803, the Government cancelled an order of the Collector for separate registration and sub-assessment of a village of the appellant made, with the subsequent sanction of the Board of Revenue, on notice to the parties concerned.

Held that the order of the Government was ultra vires

It is perfectly plain on the face of Madras Act I of 1876 that the decision of the Collector in a case within his jurisdiction whether for or against separate registration when once duly sanctioned as provided by the Act can only be questioned in a Civil Court. Separate registration is a matter of private right with which the Government has no business to interfere (27). (Lord Macnaghten.) FISCHER . SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL. (1898) 26 I. A valid consideration for an implied contract (under S. 11 of the Madras Rent Recovery Act) for the abandonment of the raiyat's rights cannot be found in the Zemindar's submission not to raise a hopeless and groundless dispute of those rights, any more than a promise to pay a sovereign in satisfaction of a debt of a guinea is supportable by the consideration that it saves the creditor the trouble of bringing an unfounded action for the larger sum (203). The judgment of the High Court says: " in the present suits " (by tenants against their landlord under the Madras Rent Recovery Act for the grant of proper pattas) "it is admitted that, prior to the construction of the wells, the tenants had always been paying the uniform punja rate of 4 fanams a guli for the suit lands, and this as far back as can be traced." From such facts it would be a legitimate inference that a contract to hold the lands at a 4-fanam rate of rent might be implied, and, when this is taken in conjunction with the terms of raiyati tenure, such a contract has at any rate an element of fixity, since so long as the raiyat's rent is paid the Zemindar cannot dispossess him against his will. It need not necessarily be inferred that such an inplied contract gives a right of occupation at the punja rate in perpetuity. Its duration may be implied to be so long as circumstances affecting the holding remain unchanged, otherwise than by the labour and outlay of the raiyat himself (202). (Lord Sumner.) Dry land-Garden crops raised on, with aid of tenants' water - Garden rates for-Contract to pay-Validity. Garden crops were raised on dry land with the aid of the water of a well sunk by the tenant at his own expense. The landlord claimed in respect of such land rent at the garden rate instead of at the dry rate under which it had been held. It was urged for the landlord that the contract between the parties must be taken to be that the raigst should pay at the dry rate for the land while dry, and at the garden rate for the land when under garden cultivation, no matter at whose expense the water should be procured.

Held that such a theory, if applicable at all, was one of general application, and was repugnant to the whole scheme of the Rent Recovery Act (204).

The whole scheme of the Act is based on the idea of making contract paramount, even when it is only implied and of recognising agreed rents in supersession of division of the produce (204). (Lord Sumner). RAJA JAGAVEERA RAMA VENKATESWARA EITAPPA P. ARUMUGAM.

-Dry land-Garden crops raised on, with aid of tenants' water-Garden rates for-Implied contract to MY Consideration for.

At some date, the respondent, raiyat, had made a well of tank at his own expense to water the land, which had been "punja" or dry land before, and thereafter he resorted togarden cultivation. No permission for the working of those wells was required on the part of the land-holder. Rent had previously been paid at the usual "dry" rate; thenceforward, it was always demanded and paid at the rate usual for 'garden" cultivation. There was no demur to the garden rate till 1903, and presumably pattas and muchilikas at that rate were regularly exchanged, in accordance with the Madras Rent Recovery Act. The land-holder conceded the existence of a contract for a rent at the dry rate before the wells were made, and alleged its supersession by another contract, since the payments at the garden rates began.

Held that, assuming there was an implied agreement to pay rent at the garden rate there was no consideration for the new promise to pay rent at that rate for land which was already held on a binding contract of tenancy at the dry rate.

No fresh consideration moved from the landlord for the raiyats' assumed promise to pay at the garden rate. The District Judge's view that the abstention by the landlord from exercising his right to resort to the waram system was the consideration for such promise is not correct, for, under the Act, if there was an implied contract for the dry rate, that contract had to be enforced, and there was no question of resorting to the waram system. Further, there is no evidence that there was any waram system in the village in question. It could not be said that the landlord forbore to harass the tenant by proceedings in the Sub-Collector's Court because (1) there is no evidence that there was actually any such forbearance and (2) such proceedings would, in face of the implied contract for the dry rate, have been useless (203). The scheme of S. 11 of the Madras Rent Recovery Act was as follows: If a contract, express or implied, and legally enforceable, was once established, the issue was determined and the proper patta was one giving effect to that contract. If, on the other hand, no such contract could be established, then in the case of a zemindary which was not surveyed by Government before the 1st January, 1859, local usage could be proved. If such usage established a proper rent, then either party, if dissatisfied with it, could require resort to the waram customary in the village for the division of the crop between landlord and tenant and, failing proof of such a customary waram, it would have been the Collector's duty to fix such rate as he thought

-S. 11 (3)-Implied contract-Evidence of-Express agreement to pay specified rent for a term-Inference from, of implied agreement to pay rent permanently at that rate -Propriety.

In a suit brought under S. 9 of Madras Act VIII of 1865 to enforce the acceptance of pattals tendered by the plaintiff and the execution of mochilikas corresponding thereto, the plaintiff's case that the asara or the sharing system was the mamood or customary mode of payment in the suit village, and that the tenants (defendants) had refused to accept the asara pattas for Fusli 1309.

The tenants denied that the asara system was in force in their village, and alleged that by a specific arrangement entered into in Fush 1299 a uniform rate of Rs. 5 per acre had been settled in perpetuity for the lands beld by them respectively.

In Fusli 1299 different rates of rent prevailed in the suit village; some were higher than Rs. 5, others lower. In that year a uniform rate of Rs.5 per acre was introduced by nsutual agreement between the landlord and tenants, and leases were exchanged on that basis for a term of five years, The defendants alleged that the plaintiff at that time expressly agreed that the rate of Rs. 5 should be permanent. The Courts in India disbelieved the story of an express agreement to that effect. But they nevertheless inferred an implied contract from the fact that rents at the same rate were paid and received for four years after the expiration of the term fixed by the leases of 1299.

Held, that the Courts below erred in inferring an implied contract from the said circumstance.

Their Lordships are unable to concur in the view of the Courts below, or to held that alongside of the express contract embodied in the leases exchanged between the parties there was a collateral implied agreement relating to fixity of rest. -Kumri Cultivation-Warg kumris-Nature and incidents of.

It appears that the Government for the parposes of clearing the undergrowth in the forests have been in the habit of allowing the forest tribes who sparsely inhabited the forest to make clearances, and grow such cereals as they were capable of. These primitive tribes cultivated certain spots, reaped the crop and then moved off to some other patches of lands. These apparently were called Government Kumris. The Government also allowed some of the neighbouring wargdars to take the leaf manures from the forest and clear the undergrowth for the desultory cultivation, called Kurnri. These apparently are designated Warg Kumris. In all these cases, dealings with forest lands appear to have been by distinct permission of the Government. (Mr. Ameer Ali.) KADOTH AMBU NAIR r. -Kumris-Wargdar Kumris-Ryotwari holding-Distinction.

It is contended that the incidents attached to wargdar Kumris in South Canara stand on the same footing as ryot wari holdings. The chief ground on which this analogo appears to be founded were two facts namely, that the wargdar possessed in these Kumri lands a heritable and transferable interest. There is, however, absolutely no relation or analogy between the nature of these kumri and ryotwari holdings. The latter belong to a totally different calegory of tenures. Ryotwari holdings relate to arable lands for fixed periods-ordinarily 30 years-and are subject to periodical surveys and assessments. No inference, therefore can be derived from the fact that kumri lands, cultivated on the kumri system, were held by wargdars whose property is transferable and heritable. (Mr. Ameer Ali.) In a contest between the widow and the surviving male member of the family of a deceased zemindar, the most important question on which the whole contest turned was whether a division had taken place in the family of the deceased. And though there was some evidence on that question, and it was decided against the widow by the first Court, and in her favour on appeal, the division was not made a distinct point in the cause, and no order was made for the production of evidence in proof of such an avernment as was required by Madras Regulation XV of 1816, and there was no satisfactory explanation as to how the evidence on that point came to be taken.

Held that the decision could not, in the face of the said Regulation, be sustained (293.4).

The Regulation points directly against the course which has been unfortunately adopted in this case because the point on which the whole case turns, and in the opinion of the appel late Court, beyond all question, the whole case was decided. never was alleged as a point in any of the proceedings, and evidence which was read in support of it never was directed or sanctioned by the Court (293). -Ss. 10 and 11-Collectors' reports under-Author rity of - Exidentiary value of.

It must be conceded that when the reports submitted by the Collectors under Ss, 10 and 11 of Reg. VII of 1817 express opinions on the private rights of parties, such opinions are not to be regarded as having judicial authority or force. But being the reports of public officers made in the course of duty, and under statutable authority, they are entitled to great consideration so far as they supply information of official proceedings and historical facts, and also in so far as they are relevant to explain the conduct and acts of the parties in relation to them, and the proceedings of the Government founded upon them (238-9).

In a suit in which the question related to the right of the zemindars of Ramnad either to appoint, or to confirm the election of, the pandaram or head of the pagoda of Rameswaram, it appeared that in or about 1834 the then Zemindar impeached the validity of the title under which the then pandaram had held the office from 1815, asserting the Zemindar's right to appoint the pandaranis as well as to manage the pagoda. That dispute was referred to the then Collector of the District. He examined the depositions sent to the Collectorate in 1815, and other documents, and he recorded the facts which, in his opinion, were adverse to the claims made on the part of the Zemindar. He also reported in favour of the title of the then Pandaram to the office. He submitted a report to the above effect. Board of Reve sue upon that report made a minute that there existed no ground for questioning the validity of the appointment of the pandaram.

On appeal to the Privy Council Counsel for the Zemindar urged that the learned Judges of the High Court had given too much weight to the report of the Collector, which they described as a "quasi-judicial proceeding."

Held, that the report of the Collector was entirely within his province, and the line of his duty, and that, though it could not be treated as having judicial authority, it was entitled to great consideration (238.9). # Permanent Settlement Regulation XXV of 1802. OBJECT OF.

Policy in pursuance of which it was passed-Other policy on foot at the time.

The British authorities appear to have taken in hand as early as September 24, 1799, the regularization of the land revenue in the Carnatics and to have issued instructions to the Board of Revenue as to the line of action to be taken for the purpose of instituting a general inquiry into the territories. Regulation XXV of 1802 was an outcome of the inquiries made under those instructions to the Board of Revenue (428). At the time when the instructions abovementioned were issued, two policies were on foot; one with

SANAD IN COMMON FORM UNDER.

SETTLEMENT PAPERS—MISDESCRIPTION OF VILLAGE IN.

----Effect of, against Zemindar, against Government, and against tenants-Misdescription if conclusive against tenants.

In a suit brought by the appellant, the Zemindar of Kuruppam, to eject the respondents, who were certain Brahmins claiming to have an agraharam tenure in a certain village, from that village, the court below came to the conclusion that the Brahmins were entitled to hold the suit village only subject to the payment of the shrotriem or fixed rent of Rs. 150, and that that was the state of things in 1800, and before the completion of the perpetual settlement of the appellant's Zemindary. From that conclusion, and upon the other evidence in the cause, the court below found that the defendants' holding under that grant was kattubadi, or other tenure subject to a fixed quit-rent, which the plaintiff could not legally determine.

The correctness of that finding was attacked before their Lordships upon the principal ground that it was conclusively shown by the llsts of the Zemindary property, upon which the perpetual settlement was made, that the village was entered in those lists, and must therefore have been treated in the settlement made upon them as a jerayeti village, and not as a shrotriem or agraharam village. The question arose as to the effect of the entry upon the interest of the holders of an agraharam tenure. As a matter of fact their Lordships were inclined to think that the description of the village in the lists was a mistake.

Held that the entry in the lists was not conclusive against the rights of the tenants (217).

They (the tenants) were not necessarily parties to the proceedings which resulted in the settlement between the Zemindar and the Government. It may be conceived that MADRAS REGULATIONS—(Cont.)

the Brahmins might have been absent whilst the proceedings were pending. There seems to be nothing in the Regulations, which would so conclude them. No doubt if the village had been entered as a shrotriem village in the settlement papers, that would have been conclusive as to the right of the Brahmins against the Zemindar, against the Government, against any purchaser at a sale for arrears of revenue, and in fact against all the world. But the Settlement Regulation XXV of 1802 does not contain anything which says that if the parties by carelessness or by accident allow their village to be misdescribed they are to forfeit their rights. It does not even say that all the shrotriem grants which then existed, and which were to be protected against future enhancen ent were to be registered; and, on the other hand, that Regulation is followed by a subsequent Regulation of 1822, which declares that the provisions of the former Regulation were not meant to define, limit, infringe, or destroy the actual rights of any description of landlords or tenants but merely to point out in what way the tenants might be proceeded against in the event of their not paying the rents justly due from them, leaving them to recover their rights infringed, with full costs and damages, in the Courts of Justice. It cannot be said that as a matter of law and of right the parties have forfeited the interest which they would otherwise have in this tenure, by reason of the misdescription of the village in the settlement papers (217). #### ZEMINDAR-GRANT BY.

It would have required very strong authority to convince their Lordships that grants made by a Zemindar before the estate was permanently settled, and became subject to the rules which may have been laid down in the Madras Regultions as to subsequent alienations of this kind, were not binding upon the successors of the grantor (217-8). -Title to inam acquired by prescription against him -Successor's right to disturb.

The true construction of Madras Regulations XXV of 1802 is that it imposed restrictions on alienations only to secure the interests of the public revenue, and that the Zemindar would have no power to disturb grants, otherwise valid, made by his predecessor, or titles to inams acquired by pre scription (40). #### PREAMBLE OF.

The preamble of Madras Regulation XXV of 1802 recognised the right of private property when it stated that the then existing mode of administration was injurious by diminishing the security of private property. It did not assert a right on the part of Government to deprive or disposses Zemin dars in their lifetime, or their heirs after their deaths, for the purpose of transferring their rights to Government, or to new holders at the will of Government, independent of some considerations connected with the realization of revenue (307). -Words-"The implied right and the actual exercise

The words of the recital "the implied right and the actual exercise of the proprietary possession are, to say the least of them, very ambiguous. But whatever may be the real meaning of those words, the recital clearly was not intended amount to more than a declaration that it had been usual for Government, in order to enforce an increased revenue, to deprive or dispossess the Zemindars, and to take the management of the Zemindaries into the hands of their own officers; or, in other words, that they were in the habit of taking khas possession of the Zemindaries of those Zemindars who neglected to pay any increased amount of revenue assessed upon them (307). They refer to "Zemindars, independent talookdars, and others who pay the revenue assessed upon their estates immediately to Government" and the words "proprietary possession" as used in the recital of Regulation XXV of 1802, must also be read in a similar sense as meaning the possession and rights of a proprietor in the technical sense in which that word is used, rgz., the person who pays the revenue immediately to Government (See Regulation I of the Madras Code, Ss. 14 and 157, (306) (Sir Barnes Peacock.) The affirmative words of S. 2 of Madras Regulation XXV of 1802. "That, in consequence of the assessment the proprietary right of the soil shall become vested in the Zemindars, etc.," did not either give to or take away from the former owners of lands not permanently assessed any rights which they then had. It merely vested in all Zemindars an hereditary right at a fixed revenue upon the conclusion of the permanent assessment with them. There are no words declaring that no proprietary right then existed, or should thereafter be deemed to exist, except in Government, in any lands not permanently settled; and in their Lordships' opinion it was not the intention of the Legislature to pass such an enactment (306). Regulation XXV of 1802 does not affect the question as to whether in 1895 the palayam was alienable or not. The Board decided in the Marangapuri case that the affirmative words of the second section of the Regulation. "that, in consequence of the assessment the proprietary right of the soil shall become vested in Zemindars, etc.," did not either give to or take away from the former owners of lands not permanently settled any rights which they then had. -Ss. 3 & 4-Permanently settled Zemindary-Inam lands within, existing at time of settlement-Resumption and assessment to revenue-Government's right of-Sanad granted and assessment fixed on quite a different basis from that provided in S. 4 of the Regulation.

Pursuant to an arrangement come to between the British Government and the then holder of the Zemindary of Venkatagiri, held subject to the payment of a fixed revenue or peshcush and to the burden of military service, a Sunnud-imilkiat istimrar was issued to the Zemindar on August 24, 1802, (but made to take effect from July 12 of that year, i.e. from before the date on which Regulation XXV of 1802 was passed. The sannad provided that, in consideration of the British Government relieving the Zemindar from the burden of military service and itself undertaking the same, " the British Government has fixed your annual contribution, including equivalent for the military service and the established peshcush for every year, at the sum of Star pagodas 1,11,058, which said amount shall never be liable to changes under any circumstances, and is hereby accordingly declared to be the permanent annual demand of Government on your Zemindary."

The sannad also stated in specific terms the extent of the Zemindary. Clause 5 of the Sunnud contained certain reservations of the absolute abandonment on the part of Government of all claim to enhance the consolidated peshcush, but they were not in reference to lakhiraj lands within the Zemindary. All those lands had been taken into consideration in arriving at the estimate of the commuted amount, but the Sunnud contained no reference whatever to them, The other documents connected with the matter showed that the Government, represented by the Governor-in-Council, on the one side, fixed a defintee specific assessment on the whole Zemindary irrespective of particular assets derived from each particular unit of property within the estate, and that the Zemindar, on the other side, accepted that arrangement on that special understanding.

On an attempt made by Government to enforce its rights against the Zemindar in respect of the lakhiraj lands within the Zemindari, the question arose whether the Zemindar was entitled to take possession of them without any liability for the payment of additional revenue or whether the Government was entitled to the benefit of the resumption and possessed the right to assess revenue on those lands,

Permanent Settlement Regulation XXV of 1802 --(Contd.)

Held that as the Sunnud to the Zemindar contained no reference to the lakhiraj lands within his zemindary provisions of S. 4 of Madras Regulation XXV of 1802 had no application in the case of his property and that the assessment fixed upon it by virtue of the arrangement adopted in 1802 was upon a basis quite different from that provided in S. 4 of the Regulation. In other words, both the assessment and the Sannad are outside the Regulation under which the Government claims the right to resume the main lands within the plaintiff's estate and to assess them separately. In a case in which the respondent sought to establish a claim to hold in perpeturity, at a fixed rent, certain villages forming part of the appellant's Zemindary under a Cuttorgotaga lease granted in 1895 by the appellant's ancestor to the respondent's ancestor, the appellant contended that the respondent was in law precluded from recovering on the strength of the said leave, inasmuch as the respondent's title was not registered according to Madras Regulation XXV of 1802, S. 8. It was said to have been settled in India that although an instrument not registered might be good against the Zemindar who executed it, the successor was not bound

Their Lordships observed, with reference to this contention, "it is not very obvious upon what principle it can be held that an instrument good against the party making it is bad against an heir, if the ancestor had an absolute power of alienation. If the successor is a remainderman, or claiming by a title which the ancestor could not defeat, the case, of course, is different" (337-8). (Lord Kingsl.con.) ### MADRAS REGULATIONS-(Contd.) Regulation XXXI of 1802-(Contd.)

Madras Regulation XXXI of 1802 refers entirely to procedure appointed for the investigation of the title to hold lands exempted from the payment of a revenue, and is inapplicable to the case of lands not exempted from the payment of public revenue (434). Object of-Private property-Right of-Interference with

The object of Registration XXXI of 1802 was merely the protection of the revenue from invalid lakiraj grants, and to provide for the mode of trying the validity of the titles of persons claiming to hold their lands exempt from the payment of revenue; it was not intended to confer upon Government any title which did not then exist. The words "alienations of land "referred not to mere transfers from one proprietor to another, but to grants for holding lands exempt from the payment of revenue. It is clear that the Regulation never intended to assert that, according to the usages of the country, there was no private right to lands; for, in rendering valid all lakiraj grants made prior to a certain date, and declaring that the holders should continue to enjoy the same free from the payment of revenue, there was this proviso, that the lands had not escheated to the State since those dates (309). It would be extremely dangerous to accept as a general principle that new rules of law are to be introduced because they seem to lawyers of the present day to follow logically from ancient texts, however authoritative, when the ancient doctors of law have not thenselves drawn those conclusions (111-12). sect of the Mahomedans applicable to the case, the plaintiff would not be heir of E.

After the death of the mother a proceeding in the Civil Court of G was instituted, in which it was recited that the plaintiff, E, and B, sons and daughte: of their mether, de eased, by their pleaders, prayed for a certificate under the provisions of Act XXVII of 1860, on the proof of heirship to the mother. Those three also by some means or other obtained possession of some property belonging to an elder sister, apparently in the character of her heirs.

Held that it was not the intention of the parties by the document referred to above to constitute each brother to the other, so as to make him an heir to his estate.

All that is directly admitted by the statement in Court (the language being that of the pleader of the parties) is that the plaintiff and the defendant were the sons of their mother, and as such claimed her property. It would be very unduly stretching the purport of this document to take it as an admission that they were also to all intents and purposes brothers and heirs to each other, and that they were entitled to succeed to each other's property, not only property obtained from the mother but any property which might have been obtained by either of them from any source whatever. -Decision of, with aid of opinion of Punchayat Mahomedan gentlemen-Weight due to.

The trial judge was assisted in his decision of this Important and difficult question (as to the legitimacy of a person and as to whether there had been proof of the acknowledgment of his legitimacy) by a Panchayet, as it is termed, formed out of twenty Mahomedan gentlemen, selected with case, and reduced to ten by five challenges on either side; and as the reduced number consisted of ten men, including the High Priest, and another Mahomedan Priest, all of whom are stated to have been mutually approved on both sides, a more competent tribunal could hardly have been appointed for the decision of such a case. On a question of Mahomedan Law, so closely allied as it swith the religion of the Mahoa edans, the opinion of Priests of the dignity of these would be entitled to respect, since they are unlikely to be ignorant of it, or consciously to swerve from it. Such a decision, therefore, creates a more than ordinary presumption of its correctness (105). (Sir James Colvile). ASHRU-FOOD DOWLAH AHMED HOSSEIN P. HYDER HOSSEIN (1866) 11 M. I. A. 94 = 7 W. R. P. PRESUMPTION OF.

The Courts have properly presumed, in many cases, both marriage and acknowledgment; for to presume acknowledgment, and to consider treatment as tantamount to it, is virtually the same thing. The loss or destruction of evidence by time or design is as likely to take place with respect to acknowledgment as with respect to any other subject; and whilst matters of the highest import are capable of being inferred and are inferred from circumstances, it would be a merely arbitrary limitation of legitimate inference to exempt this one subject from its operation (116). #### RELATIONSHIPS SUBJECT OF.

Brother - Acknowledgment of - Validity - Other heirs - Existence of - Effect - Widow if an heir within meaning of rule.

With regard to acknowledgments of relationship, the law is thus laid down in Baillie's "Digest of Mahomedan Law," -- "The acknowledgment of a man is valid in regard to five persons, his father, mother, child, wife, and mowla, because in all these cases he acknowledges an obligation, and it is not valid except for these." After giving cases of those acknowledgments which have been stated to be valid, the author adds:—"The acknowledgment of a man is not valid with respect to any other persons than those before mentioned, such as a brother, or a paternal or a maternal uncle, or the like." If this passage stood without further explanation it would lead to the conclusion that by the Mahomedan Law an acknowledgment of one person by another as his brother, and as such his heir and successor, would have no validity. However the passage is further explained thus:—"When it is said that the acknowledgment of a man is not valid with respect to any other than those above mentioned, it is only meant that it is not obligatory on any other except the acknowledger and the acknowledged; but with regard to such rights as affect them only the acknowledgment is valid, so that if one were to acknowledge a brother, for instance, having other heirs besides who deny the brothership, and the acknowledger should die, the brother would not inherit with the other heirs, nor would he inherit from the acknowledger's father if he denied the descent, but he would be entitled to maintenance as against the acknowledger himself during his life."

Quarz whether the widow is or is not an heir in the sense in which the word is used in the passage above cited, so that her existence would destroy the effect of the acknowledgment of a brother. (Sir Robert Collier.) MIRZA HIMMUT BAHADOOR T. MUSSUMAT SAHIB ZADEE BEGUM.

-Effect of-Mother's marriage with acknowledges disproved.

Under the Mahomedan Law an acknowledgment by a person that his natural son is his legitimate son will not in law confer the status of legitimacy on the son where it is established as a fact that no marriage took place between the son's mother and the a:knowledger. In face of the fact that there was no marriage such an acknowledgment is of no avail.

The status of legitimacy is not acquired by a proper acknowledgment, and the Coart is not precluded on proof of a good acknowledgment from inquiring into the fact of marriage. In Mahomedan law such an acknowledgment is a declaration of legitimacy and not a legitimation. aration, though it cannot be withdrawn, may be contradicted, for it is only a statement; legitimation is an act, which being done cannot be done. Effect of -Mother's status-Effect on.

Quare: whether, under the Mahomedan law, the acknowledgment of a son as legitimate who might be a legitimate son of his acknowledger necessarily in all cases raises its mother to the status of a wife (193) (Sir Richard Kindersely.) WISE P. SUNDULOONISSA CHOWDRANGE (1867) 11 M. I. A. 177 = 7 W. R. P. C. 13 = 1 Suth. 667 = 2 Sar. 249.

The question was whether one L. was merely a concubine or a wife of D. It was an undisputed fact that A. the son of L, was treated by his father and by all the members of the family as a legitimate son. It was not that he was on any particular occasions recognised by his father, but that he always appeared to have been treated on the same footing as the other legitimate son.

Held that circumstance of itself raised some presumption

In the case in 3 M.I.A. 295 at 318, their Lordships observed: "Where a child has been born to a father, of a mother, where there has been not a mere casual concubinage, but a more permanent connection, and where there is no insurmountable obstacle to such a marriage, then, according to the Mahomedan Law, the presumption is in favour of such marriage having taken place." In this case there is no evidence that L was a woman of bad character, or that her connection was merely casual. She appears to have lived in the house at all events up to the date of the death

The undoubted acknowledgment by the father and by the whole family of the legitimacy of A' raises some presumption of the marriage of his mother (312). (Sir Robert P. RANEE KHUJOOROONISSA P. MUSSAMUT (1876) 3 I.A. 291= ROUSHUN JEHAN. 2 C. 184 (199 200) = 26 W.R. 36 = 3 Sar. 629.

acknowledgment raises a presumption of marriage-a presumption which may be taken advantage of either by a wife claimant or a son claimant. Being, however, a presumption of fact, and not juris et de jure, it is like every other presumption of fact, capable of being set aside by contrary proof. The result is that claimant son who has in his favour a good acknowledgment of legitimacy is in this position. The marriage will be held proved and his legitimacy established unless the marriage is disproved. Until the claimant establishes his acknowledgment the onus is on him to prove a marriage. Once he establishes an acknowledgment, the ours is on those who deny a marriage to negative it in fact. (Lord Duncajn.) HABIBUR RAHMAN CHOW-DHURY P. ALTAF ALI CHOWDHURY.

Evidence of - Positive evidence-Effect of-Evidence counteracting-Pedigree of family prepared by father without mention of boy's name if.

The question was whether R, one of the plaintiffs, had been acknowledged and recognised by the deceased Nawab as his son, so as to give him the status of a son, and a title to inherit.

There was positive evidence of the acknowledgment of A' by the Nawab. The evidence given on the part of the defendant on that point was unsatisfactory. The defendant, however, produced and relied upon a genealogical tree of the Nawab's family which was returned by him to the Government. That tree was prepared after the birth of R. but it made no mention of A'.

Held that, though the pedigree would be a piece of evidence favourable to the view of the defendant, and perhaps strongly favourable to that view, it would not be sufficient to outweigh the positive evidence of the acknowledgment of R by the Nawab (17). It must not be impossible upon the face of it; i.e., it must not be made when the ages are such that it is impossible in nature for the acknowledger to be the father of the acknowledgee, or when the mother spoken to in an acknowledgment, being the wife of another, or with prohibited degrees of the acknowledger, it would be apparent that the issue would be the issue of adultery or incest. - Proof of.

The question was there was proof of an acknowledgment and recognition by the deceased Nawab of the two plaintiffs as his sons, which would give the status of sons and a title to inherit.

R, the eller son, was born 6 or 7 years before the Nawab's death. The evidence showed that he was treated by the Nawab as a legitimate son would be. He was often taken by his father on visits to the houses of Mr. W, a native of India but educated by an Englishman and a Government Official, and Major P. another British Officer, both living in the neighbourhood. The Nawab appeared to have introduced R as his son, and the evidence was that he treated him with greater affection than his admittedly legitimate eldest son. Not only in the Nawab's house was R put forward as his son, but he was taken on the above-mentionerl and other visits as if he were a legitimate son. He was always dressed as a legitimate son would be. When R's education was about to be commenced the Bismillah ceremony was performed. At that ceremony he was introduced and treated as the son of the Nawab. Further it appeared that in a report made by the Nawab to the Government a year before his death respecting the onus belonging to his family, the Nawah described R as the Nawab's son. Ruslain Alikhan," and returned exactly the same number of arms as belonging to him as belonged to his admittedly by legitimate eldest son. As against all this it was attempted to be shown that the plaintiffs were, in fact, the children of a slave girl allowed to have promiscuous intercourse with men outside the Nawab's house, and whose fathers, some of the witnesses said, it was impossible to know. That evidence, and the evidence which sought to prove that the hoys were treated as such children would probably be treated, was, however, utterly unworthy of credit.

The other plaintiff, U, was born shortly before the Nawab's death, probably about a year, or a little more. The evidence of his acknowledgment and recognition was, as might be naturally expected, much less than that in the case of R. Still enough was shown in the case of U also to satisfy their Lordships, as it satisfied the Judges of the Court below, that he was acknowledged and treated as a son.

Held that an acknowledgment by the Nawab of both the minor plaintiffs as his sons had been proved (12-7). (Sir Montague E. Smith.) NAWAB MUHANMAD AZMAT ALI KHAN r. MUSSAMAT LALLA BEGUM.

Held that, though an acknowledgment of each son must be proved, yet in the actual circumstances of the case before their Lordships, it was highly probable that when the Nawab had recognised the elder son of the 1st respondent, he would also acknowledge the younger, that that probability gave support to the evidence in the case of the latter, and that there was no reason for the Nawab's making a distinction between them (16-7). —Benami or not.

M, a Mahomedan gentleman, was of somewhat weak insellect and impaired health, and was not capable of managing his affairs. His son, the defendant left him in March, 1874, in consequence of a quarrel, carrying with him a large quantity of jewellery to which he laid claim, and M was a good deal annoyed in consequence. On 28-4-1874 Af made a gift of certain immoveable property, and also of a large quantity of moveable property, in lieu of a ring set with diamonds which he had received from his daughter, the plaintiff. The deed of gift stated: "I have transferred possession of all the property transferred by gift above referred to and detailed below, by putting the donee in possession thereof. The conditions of offer and acceptance, with transfer of possession, have been thoroughly completed. This is a valid and lawful gift." On the 1st of May, 1874, he also executed a deed of the same description, transferring certain other property which was mentioned in the schedule to that deed. On the same date (1-5-1874) the plaintiff professed to give to AI's muta wife a certain house for her lifetime; and a short time afterwards leased to him a portion of what had been previously his own house. The son, the defendant came back and joined M on the 6th of May, after the above documents had been executed.

In a suit instituted by the plaintiff against the defendant and M for restitution of goods, etc., conveyed to her under the deed of gift of 28-4-1874, the Court below held that the deed, in form at all events, was what was called a hiba-bileway, and that it would operate under the Mahomedan Law, if operative at all, to transfer the property without delivery of possession; but it came to the conclusion from all the circumstances of the case, amongst others from the absence of any change of possession, that the deed was not intended to operate as an immediate transfer or conveyance of the property, and that therefore it was void and of no effect.

Held, on the evidence affirming the Court below, that there was no intention on the part of M to make an immediate transfer of the property to the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff herself must have perfectly understood that the transaction was not a real one. -Family settlement—Benami transaction to be followed by-Test-Evidence.

In this case certain hibbanamahs were executed by the defendant (a Mahomedan father) in favour of his son, the plaintiff The trial Judge held, on the evidence, that the transfers, purporting to be made by the hibbanamahs, were " purely nominal," and that the father did not intend that any property should pass by them, or at least whilst he lived (104).

The High Court, on the other hand, came to the conclusion that the transfers were not colourable, but intended to operate as real gifts (104),

Their Lordships were disposed to adopt the opinion of the trial Judge that an absolute gift was not intended, and that the transaction was either purely benamee, or, more probably, to be followed by a family settlement (111.) -Family settlement-Fraudulent bename-Gift-Test-Evidence.

The question was whether a certain hibbanama executed by a Mahomedan in favour of his son by his second wife, a boy of ten years of age at the time, was benami, or was fraudulent and void as against his creditors.

Held, on a fair and full consideration of the state of circumstances existing at the time of the hibba, and the course of conduct pursued afterwards, that it was benami to this extent-that it was a mere pocket instrument, not intended to operate according to its tenor and effect, but by which property was put in the name of the son but for the benefit of the alleged donor, his father (17).

Held further that even if the hibba was operative as between the parties, it was, according to equity and good conscience, fraudulent and void as against creditors (19).

The hibba was not, and could not be dealt with as, a family settlement. There was no occasion for it, and the grantee was a boy of ten. It was a covinous instrument, not made bons fide or on any good consideration, and by which creditors have been delayed in their just rights. Taking the transaction as a whole, the intention of the settlor was to protect the property from those who were his creditors at the time (19;. (Lord Fit: Gerald.) ABDOOL HYE r. Where a father, being in insolvent circumstances when he purchased a property, mortgaged it, and the mort gagee who had foreclosed and had become the absolute owner of the property, not caring (out of consideration for the father and the family) to insist on retaining the whole value of the property so acquired, but willing to allow it to go back to the family on being satisfied or secured the real amount of his debt, made a conveyance of his interest under the foreclosure in consideration of money raised by the sont it was held, that the arrangement was made for the benefiof the family, and that the father's creditors had no equi, table or moral right to the property. ... a Mahomedan, and his brother had granted a putni to two persons, against whose representatives decrees were executed, one in February and one in June, 1867. In execution of those decrees the putni was sold and purchased ostensibly in the name of .1/, guardian and executrix of the two minor sons of A. and the sale deed was in favour of those minors. Admittedly A found the purchase-money. The question for decision was whether he intended his sons to be benamidars or beneficial owners. -Object of to prevent daughters from succeeding W property.

The question was whether R, the deceased son of the original appellant, was the real owner of certain properties which stood in his name or was a mere benamee-bolder of those properties for his father. The case for the father was that the funds which purchased the suit properties in the name of R were exclusively the funds of the father; that a legal presumption thence arose that the proprietary right was the father's, and that the respondents, the attaching decree-holders of R, had not rebutted that presumption.

The Courts below found as a fact, that the father pur chased the suit properties with his own funds in the name of R, but nevertheless held that R was not a mere benamidar for his father. In support of their conclusion they relied on the father's own explanation of the cause of the conveyance being taken in the name of his son, R. The explanation given by the father was that there were daughters in his family, and that he took the conveyance in the name of his sons, because he wanted to change the amount of shares of the whole property on a succession between sons and daugh-

FATHER—SON—PURCHASE IN NAME OF BENAMI OR NOT—(Contd.)

Held that the courts below were justified in regarding the whole evidence before them as not sufficient to establish the case of benamee ownership which the father advanced (402).

Had this fact (the father furnishing the purchase money) received no other addition than that the conveyance was taken in the names of his sons, the case would have fallen within the case of Gopeekrist Gossain (6 M. I. A. 53), and the argument for the father must have prevailed, but the courts below rely on a very important addition to those facts, in the father's own explanation of the cause of the conveyance to his sons; the Courts below thence inferred that a motive existed for it in the state of his family, the existence of daughters, and his desire, as expressed, to vary the rule of succession between sons and daughters in his family. If the conveyance to the sons was designed to produce an effect thereafter, by changing the amount of shares of the whole property on a succession between sons and daughters, it could not be designed as a mere naked Benamee conveyance, because a mere benamee conveyance would in no way affect such succession. But if as the father himself represented the transaction, it was designed to affect the daughter's claims, or interests, it could only so operate as a real transaction, that is, by a conveyance of interest to the sons (401-2.) In a suit by the respondents, claiming to be the nearest relations and only heirs, according to the Mahomedan law, of A, for the recovery from the appellant, his widow, of a zemindary and other properties of which A was, at the date of his death, the registered and ostensible proprietor, the appellant pleaded that A, though the ostensible purchaser and registered holder of the properties, was a mere manager and trustee for her and her family.

Held, though the oral testimony adduced by the respondents to prove the poverty of the appellant and her family, and that A, at the date of his marriage, had some, though not very ample means was hardly more trustworthy than that on the part of the appellant, the respondents were entitled to rely on the presumption resulting from his ostensible ownership of the property, until that was satisfactorily rebutted.

Held, on the evidence, that of the two cases set up by the parties, the weight of evidence was in favour of that of the respondents (219-20). (Sir James W. Colvile.) MEETH-UN BEBEE v. BUSHEER KHAN. (1867) 11 M. I. A. 213 = 1 Suth. 683-7 W. B. P. C. 27-2 Sar. 255.

----Estate held by another person as benamidar for-Transfer to first wife of, on occasion of husband's second marriage-Benami or gift,

A Mahomedan was the absolute owner of an estate held for him by a benamidar. He married a second wife, and somewhere about the same time, directed his benamidar, to effect a transfer of the formal and ostensible title to his first wife. On a question arising as to whether the transfer to the first wife was merely a benami transaction, merely effecting a change of the benamidar, or was really a gift to her of the property transferred. The Sub-Judge found that it was a gift. The High Court reversed him, holding that the transfer was merely a benami transaction.

——Purchase in name of Wife-Benami for husband or not Mortgage deed in his favour-Sale deed in wife's name in discharge of.

The respondent was the wife of the appellant. The appellant was mortgagee under a mortgage dated 10-5-1870. On 14-5-1875 the mortgagors executed a sale deed of the mortgaged property to the respondent. The deed of sale recited that a sum of Rs. 11,000 was found to be due to the appellant for principal and interest under his mortgage, that the mortgagors sold the mortgaged property in lieu of Rs. 11,000 to the respondent, and that the mortgagors having received the purchase-money in full from the said vendoe had paid it to the appellant in liquidation of the debt due to him under his mortgage. It appeared from the indorsement on the sale deed that a further sum of Rs. 250 was paid in cash to the mortgagors, and that that sum found its way back into the hands of the appellant's their agent.

The question on the appeal was what the transaction recorded in that sale deed really was. The appellant contended that the sale deed was executed ism farzi (fictitiously) in the name of the respondent, and that he was the real purchaser and assumed proprietary possession of the property comprised in the deed. The respondent, on the other hand, alleged that she purchased the property in suit with her own money, and had ever since been in adverse proprietary possession thereof.

It appeared from the evidence that no money in fact passed from the nominal purchaser (the respondent) to the vendors, and from the latter to the niortgagee, and that the narrative of the deed was not in accordance with the facts. The effect, and doubtless the object, of the deed was to make it appear that the consideration to the vendors for the sale proceeded to them from the respondent, so as to give her an apparent title for value whereas the real consideration to the vendors being the extinction of the mortgage debt, which was the property of the appellant, proceeded from him.

Held, that that circumstance, and the other evidence of the appellant and his witnesses, were sufficient to call upon the respondent for an answer, and to shift the burden of proof upon her (19).

Held further, that that burden she might discharge by shewing that the purchase-money, though not paid by her to the vendors, was paid to the appellant out of her moneys, or by evidence of continuous possession in accordance with the deed (19).

Held also, that the respondent had failed to prove either (20). (Lord Durcy.) PRINCE SULEMAN KADAR BAHADUR P. NAWAB MEHNDI. (1897) 25 I A. 15=25 C. 473 (476-7)=2 C.W.N. 186=7 Sar. 254.

A Mahomedan lady, who had only a son and a daughter, and who was extremely hostile to the former, purchased from out of her funds certain properties in the name of her daughter. On a question arising as to whether the said purchase was benami for the mother, held that, though the circumstance that the purchase-money came from the mother would, if taken alone, have afforded evidence that the transaction was benami, yet the circumstances of the case pointed to an absolute gift in favour of the daughter, and not to a benami transaction. The circumstances being that the purchase was prompted by hostility to the son and that it was made with the purpose of excluding him from inheritance, an object which could not have been attained by any benami transaction. —Sale deed in favour of, with imaginary consideration—Object of, to disinherit son—Gift really intended.

A Mahomedan Lady, who had only a son and a daughter, and who was extremely hostile to the former, executed a deed in favour of her daughter, which deed purported to be a deed of sale and to have been executed for a stated consideration of Rs. 10,000 which had already been paid. It was found that the daughter never paid any consideration for the so-called sale, and that in executing the deed, the mother was prompted by hostility to her son and that she executed the deed with the object of excluding him from inheritance. It was contended that the transaction was a mere benami transaction, or, at any rate, that, if a genuine transaction at all, it was a sale, not a gift, and the property still formed part of the mother's estate.

Held, that the transaction was neither a benami transaction nor a sale, but a gift with an imaginary consideration.

The fact that the sum of Rs. 10,000, is mentioned as the price, a sum which, according to the evidence was far short of the actual value of the property, and the fact that that sum is stated to have been paid in advance, whereas in fact, it was not paid at all, are strong to show that the transaction was not a sale, but a gift with an imaginary consideration inserted. - Benami or not.

The mere fact that this property was purchased, not in the sole name of the son, but in the name of the wife as well as of the son, affords a strong argument in favour of the hypothesis that it was a hymant purchase, for there was no such community of interest between the wife and the son as would render it probable that they had been made joint owners of the property; and the reason for putting two names rather than one into a trust applies almost as strongly in India as it would in England (247). N. a Mahomedan, executed a mortgage on behalf of his brother A as well as of himself. A suit was brought to enforce the mortgage, to which N alone, and not A also, was made a defendant. There was a reference to arbitration of the points at issue in the suit, all the parties, including N signing the agreement of reference. N died shortly after, and on his death his two widows and his minor son by his mother, one of the widows, were named as his legal representatives on the record. The arbitrators made an award, a decree was passed in accordance with the award, and in execution thereof, the mortgaged property, including the share of A therein, was sold.

In a suit brought by A for redemption of the mortgage, the question was whether the execution sale of his share in the proceedings in the prior suit could be held to have validly conveyed his interest.

Held, that the Court in the prior suit had no jurisdiction to sell A's share (34)

It must be presumed that N was authorised to sign the mortgage for his brother. At any rate, A by suing for redemption admits it. And possibly it might have been held that N's authority extended to representing him in the prior suit. But by no possibility could it be considered that he was represented by the widows or infant son of his deceased brother. In fact his interest in the property seens to have been ignored altogether. He is not mentioned as a debtor in the award, and there is no decree against him. The Court, therefore, had no jurisdiction to sell his share (34). (Lord Davey). KHIARAJMAL v. DAIM.

A Mahomedan died leaving two sons, the plaintiff and another, A. The plaintiff being an infant, the whole properties were managed by A, whose name, along with that of the plaintiff, was entered in the Government registers.

In a suit by the plaintiff against A or his representatives for the recovery of his half share of certain properties purchased by A after their father's death in the name of his (A's) eldest son, held that the plaintiff could succeed only on proving that the suit properties were purchased out of what was joint undivided property.

There is no presumption in the case of a Mahomedan such as exists in the case of a Hindu joint family. The succession of a Mahomedan is an individual succession.

-Irrevocability and completeness of -Distinction

According to existing usage, a divorce by Talak is not complete and irrevocable by a single declaration of the husband; but a divorce by khoola is at once complete and irrevocable from the moment when the husband repudiates the wife and the separation takes place (395). ### KHOOLA-DIVORCE BY.

-Admission in pleadings of Dower-Suit by wife for Admission by husband in What amounts to.

A Mahomedan wife sued her husband for the recovery of her dyn-mohr, alleging that her husband had dissolved the marriage by divorcing her, and had obtained from her by force and duress two instruments, one, an Ibranamah, or release of her dyn-mohr, and, two, a khoolanamah, or deed securing her husband the stipulated consideration to be paid by a wife in a case of khoola divorce. The husband while denying a divorce by talak, not only did not deny but set up a divorce by khoola. He alleged distinctly, in his answer, that the plaintiff took from him a Furuckutte (a deed of divorcement), that she took from him also the subsistence money of her iddit, and gave him a receipt for it, and that she then quitted his house with the assent and under the care of her mother.

Held, on a construction of the pleadings, that it was the common case of both parties that a divorce had taken place, and that the only question was, whether the husband could insist on receiving the consideration for which he said that he had stipulated (397). (Lord Kingsdown.) MOONSHEE BUSUL-UL-KAHEEM v. LUTEEFUT-OON-NISSA.

(1861) 8 M.I.A. 378=1 W.R. 57=1 Suth. 445= 1 Sar. 794.

--- Nature and consequences of.

A divorce by khoola is a divorce with the consent, and at the instance of the wife, in which she gives or agrees to give a consideration to the husband for her release from the marriage tie. In such a case the terms of the bargain are matter of arrangement between the husband and wife, and the wife may, as the consideration, release her dynmohr and other rights, or make any other agreement for the benefit of the husband (395). The divorce in such a case is the sole act of the husband, though granted at the instance of the wife, and purchased by her (396). (Lord Kinguloum.) MOONSHEE BUZUL-UL-RAHEEM 2., LUTEEFUT-OONNISSA. (1861) 8 M.I.A. 378=1 W.B. 57=1 Suth. 445=1 Sar. 794.

-Validity-Consideration-Non-payment by wife of -Effect.

The law might have provided that non-payment of the consideration should invalidate the divorce, but it is clear that the law is otherwise. The non-payment by the wife of the consideration for the divorce no more invalidates the divorce than in England the non-payment of the wife's marriage portion invalidates the marriage (396-7). ### KHOOLANAMAH.

Nature of Divorce not constituted by.

The Khoolanamah is a deed securing to the husband the stipulated consideration, but it does not constitute the divorce. It assumes it, and is founded upon it. The divorce is created by the husband's repudiation of the wife, and the consequent separation (396). (Lord Kingadown). MOON-SHEE BUZUL-UL-RAHEEM P. LUTEEFUT-OON-NISSA.

ORAL DIVORCE.

-Validity-Formalities necessary - Intention to divorce-Proof of-When necessary and when not.

According to Mahomedan law, a husband can effect a divorce whenever he desires. He may do so by words without any talaknama or written document, and no particular form of words is prescribed. If the words used are "express" or well understood as implying divorce, such as talak, no proof of intention is required. If the words used are ambiguous, the intention of the user must be proved. It is not necessary that the repudiation should be pronounced in the presence of the wife, or even addressed to her. The word "talak," if uttered once, would be sufficient to constitute an oral divorce (65-6). (Sir John Wallit.) MA MI v. KALLANDER AMMAL. (1926) 54 I.A. 61 =

-Proof of-Question raised 36 years after. In a suit by the appellant for payment of the amount of the dower debt due by the heirs of her late husband, the question was whether at the time of the appellant's marriage, which was about 36 years before the date of suit, an agreement had been made on her behalf with her husband that her dower was to be a lakh of rupees. There was admittedly no documentary evidence, and the appellant's case rested entirely on the recollection of persons who were present at the marriage,

Held that in such circumstances the oral evidence of an agreement must be clear and convincing in order to establish a claim against the estate of the man who was said to have been a party to it (715).

Held further, affirming the High Court, that the appellant had failed to prove the agreement on which her claim was based (717). (Lord Salvesen.) MUSAMMAT HAFI-ZAN BIBI D. MUSAMMAT SUBA BIBI. - District of parties Imount automary in-Exidence of adminibility and value of.

In a case in which the question was whether, as alleged by a Mahomedan widow, the amount of her dower was fixed at Rs. 40,000. She examined witnesses who proved that the sum of Rs. 40,000 was in fact agreed upon on the marriage of the appellant with her deceased husband. Three cases, also coming from the District of the parties, were referred to from the Reports of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, where the sum of Rs. 40,000 was the amount of dower

With reference to the instances from the reports their Lordships observed. These instances cannot of course, be regarded as evidence in the cause, but as matter of history they are consistent with the testimony of the witnesses. Their Lordships must not be understood to decide, that the evidence of what was customary in the District would be sufficient in itself to fix the amount of dower, for if there had been no evidence of an agreed amount, it would have been necessary to make inquiries into the usual amount of dower in the family of the appellant (the widow); but it is impossible not to see, that this sum of Rs. 40,000 was a most usual amount to be fixed, and that fact gives probability to the statements of the witnesses for the widow, who proved that such was, in fact, the dower agreed upon on this marriage (388). In a suit by a Mahomedan widow for the recovery of Rs. 50,000, the amount of her dower, alleged to have been agreed upon at her marriage with her deceased husband, the plaintiff offered in evidence, in addition to the testimony of the witnesses present at the marriage, the register of marriages kept by the Kazi, in which the marriage was recorded. The register appeared to have been kept since the annexation of the province, and all marriages were recorded in it; it contained columns for the names and description of the parties, the names of the vakils of the bride and bride-groom respectively, and the amount of the dower, together with the date of the marriage.

In a suit by a Mahomedan widow for the recovery of Rs. 50,000, the amount of the plaintiff's dower, alleged to have been agreed upon at her marriage, ten witnesses were called in support of the plaintiff's case, of whom seven were present at the marriage. They all agreed that the dower was fixed at Rs. 50,000, and that that was the minimum dower used in the plaintiff's family. Their statements were all consistent with one another, except in one particular, namely, whether the dower was prompt or deferred.

Held that as the witnesses were speaking of what had occurred sixteen years before that discrepancy should not be considered to invalidate their testimony on the more important question in dispute, of the amount of dower agreed upon (159).

The question whether the dower was prompt or deferred, only affects the reliance to be placed on the witnesses recollections, as the plaintiff was in any case not bound to see for her dower till her husband's death (159). (Lord Hammer.) ZAKERI BEGUM v. SAKINA BEGUM.

Witnesses present at marriage—Evidence of—Reieltion of—Grounds—Widow's failure to examine herself when

A Mahomedan widow sued for the recovery of Rs.50,000, the amount of her dower, alleged to have been agreed upon at the marriage. She examined ten witnesses in support of her case, seven of whom were present at the marriage. They all agreed that the dower was fixed at Rs. 50,000. The trial judge believed their evidence, and held that the dower was fixed at the said sum. On appeal, the High Court reduced the amount to Rs. 5,000 refusing to give credit to the plaintiff's witnesses. One of the reasons for their refusal was that the plaintiff herself had not given evidence.

Held that, having regard to the unwillingness of Mahomedan ladies to give evidence, and the fact that the dower would naturally be arranged by her relatives, several of whom were called, the plaintiff's absence as a witness should not be held to invalidate the testimony of those who were called (163). On appeal, his decree was affirmed.

No defence was set up in the court of original jurisdiction, upon the ground that the amount fixed was a mere sham, and that neither of the parties intended that it was to be acted upon.

Held that it was not for a court of appeal to suggest or give effect to such a defence when it was never raised in the court of original jurisdiction, which, if the question had been there raised, might have laid down a distinct issue, and taken evidence upon the subject (141). SMALL AMOUNT-PLEA BY OTHER HEIRS OF-EVIDENCE AGAINST.

-Possession of estate left with widow long after dower, if small, had been satisfied if.

The question was whether, as alleged by appellant, Mahomedan widow, her dower was fixed at Rs. 40,000, or, as alleged by the respondents, the other heirs of the deceased husband, it was fixed only at 500 dirrums.

The husband died in March, 1851, without issue, leaving the appellant his only widow. On his death, the appellant was entitled to one-fourth share of his estate, and his sister was entitled to the other three-fourths. In April, 1851, the appellant instituted proceedings in the collectorate courts to obtain the entry of her name in the Register in place of her husband. She alleged in her petition that she was in possession of the entire estate of her husband by right of inheritance, and also on account of her dower. Objection was made on the part of the respondents, the sons of the deceased's sister, who had died in the interval, but it did not prevail; and the lands were registered by the Collector in the name of the appellant "without specification of share." That order was affirmed on appeal, and the respondents were directed to establish such claim as they had in the estate by a suit in the civil courts. Notwithstanding that the respondents had the fullest notice of the appellant's pretension to hold the entire estate of her husband for her dower, they took no step to dispute her claim, or to disturb her possession of the entire estate, for a period of nearly 10 years from the date of the above proceedings. Thereafter they instituted the suit out of which the appeal arose for the recovery of their three-fourths share of the deceased's estate, admitting the appellant's claim to one-fourth share. In that suit they alleged that her dower was fixed only at 500 dirrums.

The judges of the High Court treated the above conduct of the respondents as indicating a consciousness on their part that the dower had been fixed at a considerable amount. but they did not draw the further inference that it was also indicative of a consciousness on their part that what the appellant asserted to be the amount of dower was the

Held that the further inference might fairly be drawn from the said conduct of the respondents, viz., that it was Indicative of a consciousness on their part that what the appellant asserted to be the amount of dower was the

In a suit by the son and one of the heirs of a deceased Mahomedan lady, for the recovery from his father of the plaintiff's share of the dower fixed by contract at the marriage, the plaintiff alleged and proved that the amount fixed by the contract was 9 lakhs of rupees, but, in deference to the law which prevailed in Oudh, by which the Courts of Justice were empowered to reduce extravagant dowers to such an amount as, having regard to the circumstances of the husband, they might deem reasonable, he had limited his claim (being three-tenths of the entire amount payable)

Held, in view of the provisions of the Punjab Code, that it was incumbent upon the Civil Judge to consider and determine what amount of dower it was reasonable, with reference to the husband's means, to award and that there appellant asserted to be an analysis and the proper amount, for, if that were not so, it might reasonably should have been an express issue on that point, and a

EVIDENCE AS TO AMOUNT BEING AN.

-Reduction of amount in case of-Discretion of Court.

The suit was by the widow of a Mahomedan zemindar to recover the sum of Rs. 50,000, the amount of the plaintiff's dower, alleged to have been agreed upon at her marriage with the deceased, and unpaid at the death of her husband.

The defendants contended, inter alia, that the contract of dower was regulated by the usages and customs of Oudh, and that by those usages and customs the agreed amount of dower, if excessive, might be reduced by the Court to an amount suitable to the circumstances and position of the husband and wife, and they claimed that if the agreed dower was Rs. 50,000, it was excessive and should be reduced.

The Sub-Judge came to the conclusion that the dower was fixed at Rs. 5,0000, and had not been paid. He also held that, even if the law of Oudh applied to the case, the amount of dower was not extravagant, and that no ground had been shown for reducing it.

Held, affirming the Sub-Judge, that, even if the usages and customs of Oudh applied to the marriage in question, no reason had been shown why the Sub-Judge should in the exercise of his discretion have reduced the dower in the particular case (165).

No evidence was given of the value of the husband's property, or any other relevant circumstances tending to shew that Rs. 50,000 was excessive (165). (Lord Hannen.) ZAKERI BEGUM P. SAKINA BEGUM.

-Reduction of amount-Court's powers as to-Oudk Lates Act, 1876,

It is so common a thing among Mahomedans in this part of the world (Oudh) to put into marriage contracts for dower sums far larger than the husband can pay, or than the wife expects to receive, that Courts of Justice are armed with large powers over that class of contract. By the Oudh Laws Act, 1876, it is enacted that in such cases the amount of the dower to be allowed by the Court should be reasonable with reference to the means of the husband and the status of the wife (147). -Principles of-Contract for payment of amount in cash, and of annuity for term of widow's life-Reasonable amount in case of.

On the occasion of his marriage with the plaintiff, the defendant contracted to pay her ten lacs of rupees at once and an annuity of Rs. 150 per mensem for the term of her life. The amount stipulated for was found to be excessive with reference to the means of the husband and the status of the wife, and the question was what was the reasonable amount to be allowed for dower under the Oudh Laws Act

The District Judge looked at the case as a whole, considered what was the reasonable amount to be substituted for the entire contract which could not take effect and awarded a lump sum to cover all demands by the wife.

The Judicial Commissioner, on appeal, agreed that the sum awarded by the District Judge was a reasonable sum to be granted in cash. But he thought that the annuity ought also to be continued in addition, and directed the payment of the same also, Held, reversing the Judicial Commissioner, that the decision of the District Judge was in conformity with the requirements of the Oudh Laws Act, and ought not to have been interfered with (149).

The Judicial Commissioner holds in one part of his judgment that the annuity is an integral part of the dower; but when he comes to fix the reasonable amount, he separates the two items; he takes a distinction between that part of the dower which was payable at once because no time fixed, and that which was payable by monthly instalments; and he thinks that the latter ought to be more specifically executed than the former. It appears to their Lordships that the District Judge took the course indicated by the Statutes, in considering whether the dower as a whole was excessive in reference to the means of the husband, and in considering what as a whole was a reasonable amount to be substituted. They are not intimating any general opinion against the award of an annuity in preference to, in or addition to, a sum down. Each case must depend on its own circumstances. In this case, however, they do not find any expression of opinion on the part of the Judicial Commissioner that, having regard to the defendant's means, the District Judge had awarded too little. He does not address himself in terms to that question (148-9). (Lord Hobboute). PRINCE MIRZA SULEMAN KADR P. lifetime of the husband, but at his death, which event took place after the annexation of Oudh, in 1856, the widow claimed the whole amount, although it would exhaust the entire property of the settlor, and totally exclude his heirs from succeeding to any part of his estate. The Judicial Commissioners of Oudh applied the provisions of the Punjab Code to the case; and held that, according to that Code, the deed was to be construed to mean, nor the absolute sum settled for dower, which was from the position of the settlor an extravagant dowry, but an adequate provision for the wife; and directed the estate of the husband to be divided in moieties between the widow and the husband's heirs. Upon appeal, such decision affirmed by the Judicial Committee, who held,

First, that the Commissioners were right in applying the Punjab Code to the case; and Secondly, that the Commissioners, under that Code, properly exercised their discretion in making an equitable division of the estate of the husband between the widow and the heirs (277-8). (Lord Kingsdown.) MULKAH DO ALUM NOWAB TAJDAR BAHOO v. MIRZA JEHAN KUDR.

Do the rules of the Punjab Code warrant a departure from the strict law, if law it be, by which in all cases a sum fixed as dower is to be enforced as an absolute debs? Upon this question no doubt can be entertained. They provide for a modification of the dower mentioned in a marriage-contract both in the case of a divorce and of the death of the husband. The rules laid down in S 10. cl. (iv), and in S, 11 of the Punjab Code have been and are acted upon in the Punjab in dealing with cases of dower, and they have been extended to Outh (276-7). Held that that agreement, no particular sum being mentioned, even assuming it were doubtful whether any express sum was agreed upon on the occasion of the marriage, at all events would amount to an agreement to pay a fair and proper sum, such as was reasonable, having regard to her rank (437).

The plaintiff's witnesses swore that the sum agreed upon at the time of the marriage was two lacs and Rupees, 75,000, The defendant's case was that on a second marriage it ought to be only a nominal sum, but of that he produced no evidence at all. The defendant himself admitted that in the family of the lady the usual amount of dower on a first marriage was one lac and Rs. 25,000; and the marriage settlement of the lady with her first husband showed that the dower that had been agreed to be paid by the first hushand was one lac and Rs. 25,000. And the Court below found that that sum was payable as and for dower.

The marriage took place on 19-7-1867, at Lucknow in Oudh, where the deceased was staying on a visit. The deceased died at Patna on 14-11-1880.

Dower-Conveyance of property in lieu of.

-Wife's case of -Release executed by seife on payment of dower -- Husband's case of - Proof of - Quantum.

The suit was by a Mahomedan lady against her busband and others, inter alpa, to recover possession of certain immoveable property.

The plaintiff's case was that upon her marriage with the defendant, the latter agreed to settle upon her a dower of one lac of rupees, of which one-half was to be prompt, and the other half deferred; that the defendant, not being able to pay down the amount of the prompt dower, conveyed to her in lieu thereof the suit lands; that she took possession of the property, and remained in posses-sion thereof till shortly before the suit, when she had been obliged, in consequence of her husband's cruelty and misconduct, to leave his house; and that the defendant gained over to his side the officials in charge of the documents, and thus ousted her from possession of the lands.

The defendant's case was that he had never settled any property in lieu of dower upon the plaintiff; that he had paid to her all her dower both prompt and deferred, and had taken release from her, and torn up the kabeenamah.

The questions for decision were (1) whether the defendant had executed in favour of the plaintiff the conveyance of the property relied upon by her in lieu of dower and (2) whether the release set up by the defendant was executed by the plaintiff.

On the first question the Courts below concurred in finding that the allegation made by the defendant that the entire amount of the dower had been paid, and that a release had been executed by the plaintiff could not be admitted. Their Lordships upheld that finding

On the second question the High Court held, reversing the Court below, the plaintiff's case proved. Their Lordships affirmed the decision of the High Court, Strong evidence was adduced in support of the plaintiff's case as regards the execution of the document set out in the plaint, and, though the evidence of possession was slight, it was as much as could be reasonably expected in a case in which a husband and wife had undivided shares in the same property FUKHUROODEEN MAHOMED ARSUN CHOWDRY D. will lie during the husband's lifetime, the general Mahomedan law on the point is not controlled or affected by the Punjab Code. The only articles which could have this effect are the 10th and 11th of S. 6 of the part entitled Principles of Law. These, like the other portions of this somewhat informal Code, consist of a statement or recital of what the general law is, followed by provisions for the modification of it, in its practical application to the Punjab. These recitals cannot be taken to have altered the law, because they contain an imperfect or inaccurate statement of it. And the particular articles under consideration certainly do not contain an exhaustive exposition of the Mahomedan law relating to dower, and the circumstances under which it becomes demandable. The first contemplates only the event of a divorce; the other that of the husband's death; neither makes any distinction between prompt and deferred dower; and both assume the demand to be excessive. If then by the general law, dower, whether prompt or deferred, may be claimed from the husband by the heirs of the wife on the dissolution of the marriage by her death, that part of the law is not abrogated by the Punjab Code; although it may be true that the power given to the courts to modify excessive dowers is capable of being exercised in such a case, as well as in the particular cases expressly mentioned in the recitals (827). ### Dower-Interest on-Award of, as equitable compensation.

-Widow's right to, in mit by husband's heir to recover from her possession of estate allowed to be taken by her to satisfy dower debt.

Where a widow is allowed to take possession of her husband's estate in order to satisfy her dower debt with the income thereof, it is either on the basis of some definite understanding as to the conditions on which she should hold the property, or on no understanding. If there is an agreement, express or implied, that she should not be entitled to claim any sum in excess of her actual dower, she must abide by its terms. But where there is no such understanding, and a claim for interest on the unpaid dower is made as in the present case the question arises whether, on equitable considerations, she should not be allowed some reasonable compensation, not only for the labour and responsibility imposed on her for the proper preservation and management of the estate, but also for forbearing to insist on her strict legal right to enact payment of her dower on the death of her husband. Their Lordships think that she is so entitled, and obviously compensation for forbearance to enforce a money payment is best calculated on the basis of an equitable rate of interest. This appears to be consis-tent with the chapter on "The Duties (Adab) of the Kazi" in the principal works on Mussulman law, which clearly shows that the rules of equity and equitable consider-

-Lien for unpaid doncer -- Nature and incidents of. Dower is an essential incident under the Mussulman Law to the status of marriage. When it is unspecified at the time the marriage is contracted, it must be adjudged on definite principles. Regarded as a consideration for the marriage, it is, in theory, payable before consummation; but the law allows its division into two parts, one of which is called "prompt", payable before the wife can be called upon to enter the conjugal domicil; the other "deferred", payable on the dissolution of the contract by the death of either of the parties or by divorce. Naturally the idea of payment of interest on the deferred portion of the dower does not enter into the conception of the parties. But the dower ranks as a debt, and the wife is entitled, along with other creditors, to have it satisfied on the death of the husband out of his estate. Her right, however, is no greater than that of any other unsecured creditor, except that if she lawfully, with the express or implied consent of the husband, or his other heirs, obtains possession of the whole or part of his estate, to satisfy her claim with the rents and issues clearly shows that the clouds of Chancery in accruing therefrom, she is entitled to retain such possession -Transfer of property by husband to wife in lieu of -Estate taken by her under.

On the occasion of his marriage with S, F a Mahomedan contracted to give her a certain dower, of which one-third was to be prompt. On the same occasion it was agreed that F should, in satisfaction of that portion of the dower which was prompt, make over to her twenty-two villages forming part of his zen indary; and he did accordingly make over the said villages to her by a kabinnamah. The transaction upon the face of the kabinnamah was a transfer of the said villages to S in satisfaction of the one-third of her agreed dower. It did not reserve any rent whatever. It did not make any mention of or provision for the payment of the Government revenue payable in respect of those particular villages; and though it did not contain any words of inheritance in the strict sense of the term, it did not contain any express direction that the enjoyment of the villages granted should be limited to any particular time. By an ikrarnamah executed a year after his marriage F created a sub-tenure or dependent talook out of the 22 villages as then constituted under the name of Bussoolpoor, on which he received a gross rent of Rs. 49.

In a suit brought by the successor in interest of F for enhancement of the rent of the said sub-tenure, held that the nature of the transaction evidenced by the kabinnamah afforded strong ground for the conclusion that the villages were intended to be made over to S absolutely, and for all time (173).

S was entitled to the third of her dower absolutely. She might have disposed of that as she pleased; and when, in lieu of that she took a grant of the villages, the presumption is that she was intended to take an absolute interest. It may seem strange that no provision was made expressly in the instrument for the payment of the Government revenue. But the Zemindar may have been willing to take the whole of the Government revenue upon himself; and his doing this may have been an element in the settlement of the terms upon which the third of the dower was to be given up (173). It does seem incredible that, if the wife was entitled to a large dower, she should have given it up without the husband obtaining from her some writing or other authentic evidence of her having so released it, particularly as she had once before sued for the prompt dower and had obtained a decree and that suit was very formally compromised. #### Dower-Relinquishment of property by son in satisfaction of.

-Estate taken by widow under.

A relinquishment by the son of a Mahomedan of his share in his father's possession in satisfaction of the latter's widow's claim for dower would be prima facie absolute; and if it is absolute, the widow would take the whole property, subject to the claims of other creditors.

An arrangement between a Mahomedan widow (a claimant for unpaid dower) and son, whereby the latter relinquished his share in his late father's property, was construed by the High Court as giving the mother only a lifeinterest, the son retaining the legal reversion, but the Privy Council reversed the same on the ground that the creation of such a life-estate did not appear consistent with Mahomedan usage, MUSSAMUT HUMEEDA P. WIDOW-SUIT BY, AGAINST HUSBAND'S HEIRS.

-Charge in respect of donoer debt-Decree creating-What amounts to-Competency of Court to pass such a deiree.

II, a Shia Mahomedan, executed certain deeds by which he disposed of his immovable properties. He died subsequently, leaving A, his sister, his sole heir. Shortly after his death, his widow instituted a suit against A, the persons interested in her husband's alienations, and certain other creditors of her husband. She claimed by her plaint that thuse alienations were invalid, and that she was entitled to recover her dower debt from the properties. She prayed for a decree for a certain sum, for a declaration that the properties specified in the Schedules to the plaint were "the heritage " of H, and that " the plaintiff be empowered to recover her decree from them." A specific issue was raised at the hearing of that suit, "whether the dower debt . . . can be realised from the properties mentioned in the plaint." The decree passed in the suit in favour of the widow ordered " and decreed that this suit be decreed with costs and interest . . . . that Rs. 40,000 and one gold mohur . . . be declared the dower debt of the plaintiff, that the properties entered in Schedules Nos. 1 and 2 to the plaint be treated to be the properties of H" (the husband) " from which the plaintiff is entitled (to recover) the decretal money."

Held that the decree, on its true construction, created a charge on the properties in respect of the dower debt of the widow.

The widow in her suit was not seeking merely to be put in a position to execute a money decree against the estate, but was asking the Court by its decree to imprint upon the properties a specific liability to satisfy the dower debt, or in other words, to charge the properties with the payment of this particular debt.

Semble it was within the competence of the Court in the widow's suit to make a declaration creating a charge. (Sir George Lounder.) SAIYID QASIM HUSAIN v. HABIBUR (1929) 56 I.A. 254 = 8 Pat. 926 = RAHMAN.

Whom-Suit by Agment Husband's Heirs-(Contd)

The appeal arose out of a suit brought by the plaintiff, claiming dower which, she alleged, was settled upon her at the time of her alleged marriage with F. against the wife of B and two of her sons by that wife. The suit necessarily involved the consideration of the question of marriage, and, accordingly, two issues were settled, one raising the question whether the plaintiff had been married to B, and the other, raising the question whether the amount of dower which she claimed was really agreed upon at the time of the alleged marriage.

The trial Judge found, on the evidence, both issues against the plaintiff and dismissed the suit.

On appeal, the High Court agreed with the Court below in the finding as to the dower, but came to an opposite conclusion on the issue of marriage. They accordingly modified the decree of the trial Judge to that extent, and in their own decree inserted a declaration that the plaintiff was married to B.

mortgagee. The widows then obtained a decree that the son must account for the assets of the estate of the deceased which had come to his hands, and that to the extent of those assets he was liable to pay the amount due to the widows in respect of their dower, the widows, in respect of their claim ranking para passu with other ordinary creditors of the estate.

Held that the mortgage bond executed by the son gave the mortgagee a title to the estate which had been mortgaged by the bond before the institution of the suits by the widows, and that the rights of the mortgagee and of those who claimed under the sale in execution of his decree were not affected by any of the proceedings in the widow's suits (223).

The son had, pending the suits brought by the widows, executed another mortgage bond to another person, and the appellant in the other appeal claimed under a sale in execution of a decree upon that mortgage bond.

Held that, there was a great distinction between the position of the mortgagee under the later mortgage and that of the mortgagee under the earlier mortgage, and that the mortgagee under the later mortgage and all persons claiming under him, or under the sale in executionof the decree upon his bond, were bound by the decree in the suit instituted by the widows before the bond was executed (224). The plaintiff-respondent, the widow of a deceased Mahomedan, sued to recover the entire property left by him from the defendant, his brother, who had taken possession of the same on the death of the deceased. The plaintiff alleged that, according to the custom and the entries made in the settlement sorjibulars, she was entitled to succession and to inherit the entire property left by her deceased hus-

The plaintiff had previously brought a suit against the defendant, in which she claimed Rs. 30,000 for dower. A decree for Rs. 166 was made in that suit in an appeal by the plaintiff from the order of the District Judge who had dismissed the suit. The question for decision was whether the subsequent suit was wholly barred under S. 43 of C. P. C. of 1882 by the decree in the dower suit.

Held that it was not (158.9).

The dower suit did include the whole of the claim in respect of the cause of action in the suit, viz., the right to dower and the non-payment of it. No portion of that claim was either relinquished or omitted. It cannot be said that the claim of the plaintiff as heir of her husband to the whole of his property was a portion of her claim to dower. The causes of action in the dower suit and in the present suit are distinct, and it was pointed out by this Committee in case of the Rajah of Pittapur (L. R. 12 I. A. 119) that the corresponding section in the C. P. C. of 1859 does not say that every suit shall include every cause of action or every claim which the party has, but every suit shall include the whole of the claim arising out of the cause of action, mean ing the cause of action for which the suit is brought (158-9). RIGHT TO RETAIN POSSESSION TILL DOWER DEBT IS SATISFIED.

--- Basis of Hypothecation of estate for dower-Theory of Correctness of.

The claim of a Mahomedan widow to hold the estate of her husband to satisfy her dower cannot be founded upon an original hypothecation of the estate for her dower, for such a right does not arise by the Mahomedan law as a consequence of the gift of dower (383-4). Basis and extent of.

Whatever the right of a Mahomedan widow in possession of her husband's estate to retain that possession until her dower is satisfied may be called, it appears to be founded on the power of the widow, as a creditor for her dower, to hold the property of her husband, of which she has lawfully, and without force or fraud, obtained possession, until her debt is satisfied, with the liability to account to those entitled to the property, subject to the claim for the profits received (384). -Nature and basis of Widow if a mortgagee, usufructuary or other.

The right of a Mahomedan widow who has obtained actual and lawful possession of her husband's estate under a claim to hold it as heir and for her dower, to retain that possession until her dower is satisfied, whatever that right may be called, appears to be founded on the power of the widow as a creditor for her dower to hold the property of her husband of which she has lawfully and without force or fraud obtained the possession until her debt is satisfied, with the liability to account to those entitled to the property subject to the claim for the profits received. Neither the possession of the property nor the right to retain that possession when acquired is conferred upon the widow by the agreement or bounty of her deceased husband. The possession of the property being once peaceably and lawfully acquired, the right of the widow to retain it till her dower-debt is paid is conferred upon her by the Mahomedan law. The husband, when he grants dower to the wife, cannot, by any original hypothecation of his property, secure to her the payment of it. The widow who holds possession of her husband's property until she has been paid her dower has no estate or interest in the property as has a mortgagee under an ordinary mortgage. There are essential differences between the position of a Mahomedan widow entitled to dower, who enters upon her deceased husband's property lawfully and peaceably, and only claims to retain that possession till her dower-debt is satisfied, and the position and right of a mortgagee usufructuary or other to whom an owner pledges his property to secure the repay-ment of a debt. There is no real or true analogy between the two (151). (Lord Atkinson.) MAINA BIBI v. CHAU-II. AHMAD. (1924) 52 I. A. 145= 47 A. 250 = 6 L.B. P.C. 25 = 2 O.W.N. 180= DHRI VAKII, AHMAD, — Dismissal of, for non-payment of balance of decorr as per decree—Suit subsequent by them for recovery of property—Maintainability—Res judicata.

Immediately on the death of a Mahomedan, his widow took possession of his immoveable property claiming to hold it in lieu of her dower-debt. Thereupon the heirs of the deceased sued the widow for immediate possession of their share of the property, alleging that the dower-debt had long previously been paid from the property. It was, however, found that a portion of the dower-debt still remained unsatisfied, and a decree was passed directing that the plaintiffs should be put in possession of the property on condition that they paid the widow a certain sum, the balance of the dower-debt found to be due to her, within a date fixed, and that, in default of the plaintiffs making the said payment, their suit should be dismissed with costs. The plaintiffs defaulted to make the payment within the date fixed, and their suit accordingly stood dismissed.

In a suit subsequently instituted by the plaintiffs against the widow and donees of the property from her for the recovery of possession of the same either unconditionally or conditional on their paying such balance as might be found due to the widow for her dower-debt, held that the suit was not barred under S. 11 of C. P. C. of 1908 by reason of the dismissal of the prior suit (156-7).

The right to get immediate possession of land at the date when a suit to recover it is, in fact, instituted, is a wholly different thing, a wholly different res. from the right to recover it at some future time, and possibly under wholly altered circumstances. The non-fulfilment of the condition attached to the decree in the earlier suit only extinguished the right to recover immediate possession as actually claimed, and could not and did not extinguish the right of the plaintiffs to the inheritance of, or their rights to recover possession of, the lands at some future time. That fact prevents S. 11 of C. P. C. of 1908 from applying. The matter in issue in the first suit was not directly and substantially raised in issue in the second (157). (Lord Atkinson.) ——Widon's marriage—Denial false of—Suit on foot of —Amendment of plaint in appeal so as to make suit one for plaintiff's share and for accounts—Permissibility—Discretion of Court.

The plaintiff, claiming to be the sole heir of a deceased Mahomedan, sued to recover the real and personal estate of the deceased, and for mesne profits. The respondent, who was in possession, claimed to be the wedded wife of the deceased and to be entitled to a sum of Rs. 46,000 for her dower. The plaintiff denied that the respondent was the wrdded wife of the deceased and that she was entitled to any dower. He did not claim in the alternative, that if the marriage of the respondent, and the deed of dower were proved, then that he might have his share of the estate.

Their Lordships observed: It is possible it might have been competent to the court below, in their discretion, to have entertained such a question, but it was a matter of discretion for the Judge of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut (230). - Wistow's marriage—Denial false of—Suit on foot of Decree dismissing—Plaintiff's right to relief on foot of establishment of marriage and of deed of dower—Rettration in decree as to—Necessity.

The plaintiff, claiming to be the sole heir of a deceased Mahomedan, sued to recover the real and personal estate of the deceased, from the respondent, who, he alleged, was not the wedded wife of the deceased. The respondent claimed to be the wedded wife of the deceased and to be entitled to a sum of Rs. 46,000 for her dower under a deed of dower executed by the deceased in her favour. The plaintiff denied that the respondent was the wedded wife of the deceased and that she was entitled to any dower. He did not claim in the alternative, that if the marriage of the respondent, and the deed of dower were proved, then that he might have his share of the estate. He did not ask for an account. He also excluded all the moveable estate, and that position of the immoveable estate of which he himself had obtained possession.

missed the suit.

Held that, in the circumstances of the case, the right and convenient course was to dismiss the suit but that a declaration ought to be added that the dismissal was to be without prejudice to the right of the plaintiff to bring a suit for an account and administration of the deceased's estate consistent with the establishment of the marriage and the deed of dower (230-1). SUIT BY OTHER HEIRS FOR RECOVERY OF THEIR SHARES OF ESTATE FROM.

Decree in-Form of Dower due to widow unsalitfied - Mesne profits and accounts not prayed for in suit.

The respondents were the sister's sons of a deceased Mahomedan, and the appellant was his widow. The respondents were entitled to three-fourths share of the deceased's estate in right of their mother, and the appellant was admittedly entitled to the other fourth share. But the appellant got possession of the entire estate of her husband and claimed to hold it by inheritance, and also on account of her dower. Nearly 10 years after she had been in possession, the respondents sued to recover from her their three-fourths share of the deceased's estate. On appeal the Privy Council found that the appellant was entitled to a dower of Rs. 40,000, and held that she was entitled to remain in possession till her dower debt was satisfied. Their Lordships considered whether they ought to direct an account to be taken in the

Considering, however, the way in which the litigation had been conducted, that no account was ever even asked for by the respondents, and that mesne profits were not even claimed in the suit, their Lordships were of opinion that the proper course to be taken was to dismiss the suit as against the appellant, without prejudice to any suit that might be instituted by the respondents for an account and administration of the deceased's estate, consistently with the declaration as to the appellant's dower (390). (Sir Montague E. Smith.) MUSSUMAT BEBEE BACHUN D. SHEIKH (1871) 14 M. I. A. 377= HAMID HOSSEIN. 10 B. L. R. 45 (P. C.) = 17 W. R. 113.

The respondents were the sister's sons of a deceased Mahomedan, A, and were in right of their mother entitled to a three-fourths share of A's estate. The appellant was the widow of A, and was, as such, entitled to the other fourth share of his estate. She, however, managed to obtain lawful possession of the entire estate of her husband and claimed to hold it as heir and for her dower. The respondents sued the appellant to recover their shares of A's estate, admitted her right as widow to one-fourth share. The appellant instituted another suit against the respondents to establish her claim to dower. In both the suits, the appellant urged that her dower was fixed at Rs. 40,000 and one gold mohur, but the respondents asserted that it was only 500 dirrums.

The Principal Sudder Ameen held, on the evidence, that the appellant had not made out that the dower was fixed at Rs. 40,000; and he also held that the statement of the respondents that the dower was fixed at 500 dirrums, " was conjectural". On appeal the Judges of the High Court were of opinion, that they could not declare that the appellant was entitled to demand the amount claimed by her. They said that the amount of dower must have been considerable, but that they could not declare what the exact amount was. They, therefore, held that it would be just and equitable to order that the respondents received no mesne profits, except what accrued since the institution of their suit. With that modification they confirmed the judgment below.

Held that the judgment of the High Court was neither a final nor satisfactory determination of the main question in the suit (385).

On the view taken by the High Court, the widow was, at all events, entitled to a proper dower, to be ascertained according to Mahomedan law. But no attempt was made to arrive at what would be the proper dower, nor was any account taken of the proceeds of the estate. It is obvious, therefore, that the Court has set off one unascertained sum against another unascertained sum. This mode of settlement, if suggested to the parties as a compromise, might perhaps have been, with their assent, a fit end of the litigation; but it cannot properly be made the basis of a decree Basis scope and effect of.

A Fazoolee or dependent sale under the Mahomedan law (that is, a sale by an unauthorised person remaining dependent on the sanction of the owner) remains wholly uneffective until it receives the "confirmation" of the owner, to whom alone belongs the power of "confirming" it. If he dies before he has "confirmed" it, the transaction falls to the ground, as the right to adopt the fazulis "act does not pass to his heirs (90). The Hanafi doctrine relating to a sale by an unauthorised person remaining dependent on the sanction of the owner refers to a case in which such owner is tui juris possessed of the capacity to give the necessary sanction and to make the transaction operative. The doctrine appears clearly to be based on the analogy of an agent who acts in a particular matter without authority, but whose act is subsequently adopted or ratified by the principal which has the effect of validating it from its inception (90-1). Gift-Absolute gift-(Contd.)

Semble a gift by a Mahomedan to his wife of Government promissory notes subject to a condition that she is to have the interest only for life and that after her death there is to be a trust in perpetuity for all her heirs to all time is, according to Mahomedan law, in its legal effect, a gift to her absolutely, the condition being void (122). Deed amounting to a.

A deed executed by a Mahomedan was in the following words :- "As I have divorced my wife, her son. Jet Sing, by illicit intercourse, is hereby disinherited: I have therefore adopted you" (the appellant). Then there followed after the signature these words:—"I have adopted Rana Jeswunt Sing" (the appellant) "to succeed to my property and title; no one shall interfere in this adoption. I have also made provision for all my wives by assigning a portion of land for their maintenance; they shall not be annoyed in any way, but considered as the mothers of Jeswunt Sing, and so treated and maintained. I have no son, and the heir to the estate is my brother Rana. Chutter Sing, whose son, Jeswant Sing, I have adopted."

Held that the instrument could not be treated as a deed of gift which passed any property to the appellant (257.8).

Their Lordships feel great difficulty in saying that any gift absolutely was here intended. The words are. "I have adopted Rana Jeswant Sing to succeed to my property." When is he to succeed-after his death? Where is the relinquishment or any giving up of the property? There is none. If these words were intended to pass the property, there is a complete absence of any relinquishment by donor or of seisin by the donee (257-8). (Lord Langdale.) JES-WANT SING JEE P. JET SING JEE.

F executed a deed of gift in favour of her daughter, Z. F subsequently presented, through her authorised agent, a etition for mutation of names in favour of Z, the petition reciting the deed of gift and stating that Z had been put into proprietary possession of the property conveyed thereby. The Tasildar, acting under the orders of the Assistant Collector, had the petition proclaimed and an enquiry as to possession made. That was done, and the village patwari reported that F had made a gift of her own rights to Z, and that the latter had duly obtained possession of the property conveyed. The Tasildar reported to the same effect. All this was done during the lifetime of Z. Notwithstanding the proclamation, however, none of the persons who claimed to be real heirs of F, raised any objection to the mutation. And an order for mutation of names was granted, but after the death of Z.

Held that the order for mutation was important as shewing that no objection was made to the mutation, and that the report of the patwari made during the lifetime of Z as to the execution of the deed of gift and of the transfer of possession under it which had been adopted by the Tahsildar was also adopted and acted upon by the Deputy Collector (216-7). - Transfer of Property Act and Trusts Act-Effect of, in case of registered deeds.

It has been contended that the rule of Mahomedan Law that a voluntary gift is void unless it is accompanied by a delivery of such possession as the subject of the gift is susceptible of was altered or qualified by the combined operation of the Transfer of Property Act (Ss. 122, 123 and 125) and the Indian Trusts Act (Ss. 55 and 56). It has been insisted that, if the deed of gift of immoveable property be duly registered, delivery of possession is not necessary to make the gift valid, or, if necessary, may be effected at any time during the donor's life, provided he be then capable of giving the property. S. 122 of the Transfer of Property Act still requires a "transfer" to be made of the subject of the gift. This would prima facic mean a valid transfer, and would therefore require the transfer to be accompanied by delivery of possession. But it is argued that there can be no delivery without acceptance by the donee of the gift, that it implies acceptance, and as acceptance may take place at any time during the donor's life under the conditions mentioned, it follows that the required delivery of possession may take place at any time during his life under the same conditions. Gift -Delivery of possession-(Contd.)

ZEMINDARY-GIFT OF ENTIRE

-Possession taken of part only-When sufficient deli-

A Mahomedan widow executed a deed of gift in favour of L, her husband's brother, the material part of the deed being as follows:—

I. make a gift of the moveable and immoveable property, the entire Zamindari and lambardari estate, etc., in favour of L. the detail whereof is being given below, with the exception of the villages and Sir lands, etc., of the estates, specified below, which shall, during my lifetime, remain in my and my relations' possession, free of rent and without payment of Government revenue; and I do hereby invest the donee with the power to have the mutation of names effected in his favour. Now I have nothing to do with the gifted property and estate. I shall keep the villages and Sir lands, which have been exempted hereunder, for my lifetime without the power of alienation by mortgage, sale and gift; and after me, the donee shall also be the owner of the said exempted property. The donee shall pay the Government revenue of the said exempted estate from the ilaga."

It was contended that in so far as the deed purported to be a gift of the exempted property it was void on the ground that no possession was actually taken of that particular property, and no mutation of names in respect—of that particular property was obtained by L until the widow had died.

On the execution of the deed of gift, Z did obtain mutation of names in his favour of all the other Zemindari property, and from the date of the deed until the widow died, he paid the Government revenue which became due in respect of the exempted property. He did not, however, until the widow's death take physical possession of the property in question, or apply for mutation of names in his favour in respect thereof.

II.dd, affirming the Court below, that I. must be regarded as having been constructively in possession although not in physical possession, of the corpus of the property in dispute from the date of the deed until the date of the death of the widow, and that the gift was a valid gift,

In their Lordships' opinion the whole Zamindari property mentioned in the deed, and not parts of it only, must, for the purposes of this case, he regarded as one property, the taking possession of any part of it being constructively a taking possession of the whole. In a case in which an oral gift by a deceased Mahomedan in favour of his widow was set up, its validity was attacked on the ground that, at the time of the alleged gift, the deceased was in a state of mind in which he could not comprehend the full effect of the act he was doing, and that, in fact, he was imposed upon by his wife, and by her brother, who had for sometime managed the deceased's estate, held, on the evidence, that the deceased was perfectly able to comprehend such a transaction as a gift of his property to his wife (271). A. a Mahomedan who had purchased property benami in the name of K, caused the formal and ostensible ownership of the property to be transferred from K to A's wife, who was very young, "a mere child," at the time A's true intention in doing so was to give her a beneficial title to the property. In considering what is the Mahomedan law on the subject of gifts interviews, their Lordships have to bear in mind that when the old and admittedly authoritative texts of Mahomedan Law were promulgated, there were not in the contemplation of any one any Transfer of Property Acts, any Registration Acts, any Revenue Courts to record transfers of the possession of land, or any Zamindari estates large or small, and that it could not have been intended to lay down for all time what should alone be the evidence that titles to lands had passed. The object of the Mahomedan law as to gifts apparently was to prevent disputes as to whether the donor and the donee intended at the time that the title to the property should pass from the donor to the donee, and that the handing over by the donor and the acceptance by the donee of the property should be good

-Undivided shares-Donor giving to donce all his own interest in.

It was contended that the rule of Mahomedan law that a gift of musha, or an undivided part in property capable of partition, was invalid only applied to cases where the donor himself retained some share of the property, and not to those where the owner gave all his own interest in undivided shares to the donee. The authorities on Mahomedan law do not seem to be agreed on this point, and their Lordships in the view they take, do not think it necessary to enter upon the consideration of it (106), (Sir Montagne E. Smith). Americani of it (106), (Sir Montagne E. Smith). Americani (1875) 2 I. A. 87 = 15 B. I. R. 67 = 23 W.B. 208 = 3 Sar. 423 = 3 Suth. 87.

—Zemindaries—Gift of definite shares in—Land itself undivided, but shares in their nature separate estates with separate and defined rents.

A legal objection to the validity of these gifts was made on the ground that the gift of musha, or an undivided part in property capable of partition, was, by Mahomedan law, invalid. In the present case the subjects of the gift are definite shares in certain zemindaries, the nature of the right in them being defined and regulated by the public Acts of the British Government. The High Court, after stating that the shares "were for revenue purposes distinct estates, each having a separate number in the Collector's books, and each being liable to the Government only for its own separately assessed revenue," and further, that the proprietor collected a definite share of the rents from the ryots, and had a right to this definite share and no more, held that the rule of the Mahomedan law did not apply to property of this description (105).

This view of the High Court is correct. The principle of the rule and the reasons on which it is founded do not in their Lordships' judgment apply to property of the peculiar description of these definite shares in Zemindaries, which are in their nature separate estates, with separate and defined rents. It was insisted that the land itself being undivided and the owners of the shares entitled to require partition of it, the property remained musha. although this right may exist, the shares in Zemindaries appear to their Lordships to be, from the special legislation relating to them, in themselves and hefore any partition of the land, definite estates, capable of distinct enjoyment by perception of the separate and defined rents belonging to them, and therefore not falling within the principle and reason of the law relating to musha (105-6). DOCTRINE OF-CONSTRUCTIVE APPLICATION.

-Permissibility.

The attitude of the law towards the doctrine of muthal does not involve any constructive application of the doctrine. The doctrine is wholly unadapted to a progressive state of society, and ought to be confined within the strictest limits. (Lord Robertson). IBRAHIM GOOLAM ARIFF D. SAIBOO.

DOCTRINE OF-REASONS FOR.

Applicability of rule-Instances given by text

A legal objection to the validity of these gifts was made on the ground that the gift of musha, or an undivided part in property capable of partition, was, by Mahomedan law, invalid. That a rule of this kind does exist in Mahomedan law with regard to some subjects of gift is plain. The Hedaya gives the two reasons on which it is founded. First, that complete seisin being a necessary condition in cases of gift, and this being impracticable with respect to an indefinite part of a divisible thing, the condition cannot be performed; and, secondly, because it would throw a burden on the donor he had not engaged for, viz., to make a division. Instances are given by text writers of undivided things which cannot be given, such as fruit unplucked from the tree and crops unsevered from the land. It is obvious that with regard to things of this nature separate possession cannot be given in their undivided state, and confusion might thus be created between donor and donee which the law will not allow (105). #### INVALID GIFT OF.

--- Possession given and taken under-Effect-Change of possession subsequent-Gift not rendered invalid by.

Possession given and taken under an invalid gift of musha transfers the property according to the doctrines of both the Shiah and Soonee schools (215). If possession were once taken and the deed of gift took effect no subsequent change of possession would invalidate it (216). (Sir Barnes Peaceck.) SHEIKH MUHAMMAD MUMTAZ AHMAD v. ZUBAIDA JAN. Gift-Trust-Gift through medium of.

Validity-Delivery of possession-Necessity-Down-Gift to wife in lieu of-Validity without delivery of possession of.

The parties to a trust indenture executed by a deceased Mahomedan and registered were, the deceased of the first part; F, his second wife, of the second part; and M and F aforesaid, described as trustees, of the third part. The deed recited that a balance was due to F out of the amount of dower agreed upon at the time of the deceased's marriage with her; that the deceased was desirous of making the settlement thereafter appearing to prevent disputes between F and her children, on the one hand, and the children of the deceased's first marriage, on the other; that it was agreed between the parties thereto that the intended settlement should be in full payment and satisfaction of the dower payable by him, as therein mentioned. The settlor, in consideration of the premises and in payment and discharge of the balance of the dower payable by him, conveyed to the trustees and their heirs all the properties in the schedule to the deed mentioned to hold the same in trust to pay the income of the same to the said F during her life for her sole and separate use, subject to the cost of maintaining and educating his children by her, and after her death in trust for all the aforesaid children being at his, the settlor's death, as tenants in common, in equal shares.

The deed did not contain any formal release of F's right to payment of the unpaid balance of her dower. It was executed by the deceased alone and no proof whatever, independent, of the deed, was given that any agreement such as was mentioned in it was ever entered into between the settlor and F to the effect that she would accept the provision purported to be made for her by it in satisfaction and discharge of her claim for the upaid balance of her dower.

Held that an agreement by F that she would accept the provision purported to be made for her by the deed in satisfaction and discharge of her claim for the unpaid balance of her dower was the only consideration moving to the settlor given for the grant he made, and that unless and until that agreement was proved to have been entered into, the grant and conveyance to the trustees must be taken to be a purely voluntary gift, depending for its validity upon delivery of possession required by Mahomedan law in the case of such gifts (219-20, 231).

Held further that, though the deed should be merely voluntary, I might, acting with full knowledge of her rights, deliberately elect to take the benefits conferred upon her by it in lieu of the balance of her dower, and that, if she did so elect, she would be bound by the choice thus made, but that that election could not create the agreement between her and her husband, which was the sole consideration for the deed, and could not enlarge the operation of the deed itself, and that notwithstanding it, the grant to the trustees would still remain a purely voluntary gift (220) Subsequent election could not be held to be a subtitute for the original consideration (220). MAHOMEDAN LAW-(Contd.)

-Conditions.

Under the Mahomedan law it is requisite that a gift should be accompanied by delivery of possession, and that seizin should take effect immediately, or if at a subsequent period, by desire of the donor. A gift cannot be implied—it must be express and unequivocal—and the intention of the donor must be demonstrated by his entire relinquishment of the thing given; and the gift is null and void where he continues to exercise any act of ownership over it (257). For a valid gift inter rytus under the Mahomedan law, three conditions are necessary: (a) manifestation of the wish to give on the part of the donor; (b) the acceptance of the donee, either impliedly or expressly; and (c) the taking of possession of the subject-matter of the gift by the donee, either actually or constructively". M, who was a Hanafi Mussulman and who owned proprietary shares in 11 villages, made a will on 18-1-1894, and on the same day executed what was called an agreement, by which he made a declaration that he would remain in possession of the properties comprised in the will as long as he lived, but that he should not have power to alienate the same.
